Police say about $3,400 in electronics equipment — including a stereo, about 150 compact discs, a Nintendo game and a VCR — and jewelry were taken from three rooms.

About seven members had personal belongings stolen. According to a report in the Daily Illini, police said they believe the burglary occurred on March 12 that day, during a routine check of the area where the house is located, police saw one door standing open. The officers said they unsuccessfully tried to contact someone to secure the door.

Fraternity members say the total losses may be higher than the current estimate because they are still compiling a list of all the missing items.

Nice Guys Do Finish First, Says Texas A&M Study

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (CPS) — Nice guys are more socially desirable as well as more sexually attractive, says a study by a psychology researcher at Texas A&M University.

Lauri Ann Jensen-Campbell says the study proves that unselfishness seems to enhance a man's attractiveness, regardless of how he looks. In contrasts, the study found that the dominance exhibited by outgoing, extroverted men seems to detract from their appearance.

The researcher videotaped two men acting out four different behaviors with "attractive" and "unattractive" faces provided by a makeup artist, then showed the tape to 100 females.

Each woman rated the attractiveness of the man that she watched. Jensen-Campbell made sure some women observed the attractive "unselfish" man, while others observed an attractive "selfish" man.

According to Jensen-Campbell, the women perceived physically attractive men as having more wealth, but did not perceive men who behaved in a dominant fashion as having more wealth.

Altruistic behavior, however, made the men seem more sexually desirable and more likable, according to the study.

William Kennedy Smith To Begin Medical Residency At UNM

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (CPS) — Six months after he was acquitted of rape charges, William Kennedy Smith will begin his medical residency at the University of New Mexico.

The university has announced that Smith would join 19 other incoming first-year internal medicine residents in June. He had been one of 20 invited to join the program last June.

Smith, 31, nephew of Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., was acquitted last December in West Palm Beach, Fla., of charges he raped a woman at the Kennedy estate.

Local Merchant Fufills Dream

By CHRISTY MOTTLEY

Charlie Simmons, owner, "Charlie's Fine Food and Cocktails," recently purchased the former "Monty's Restaurant and Cocktails" building on West Third Street to fulfill a dream.

Although skeptical of purchasing the restaurant during a time of recession, Charlie has been pleased with her success.

"From my angle it doesn't look like the country is having any economic problems. Since opening, two months ago, my business has been wonderful. I just hope it will continue," she said.

"Charlie's" does not specifically cater to the student population as do Perini's and MacAdo's. Her main goal is to provide fine dining at a reasonable price, to anyone. Dinner prices average from $8.95 per person, which include your entree, salad and vegetable, to $21 per couple. Obviously, the price is dependent upon the chosen entree.

"Charlie's" chef prepares a nightly special. However, in order to alleviate boredom, "Charlie's does not set specialty nights such as Mondays — Italian, Tuesday — Mexican, etc. There are plans to offer specialties of fresh Alaskan crab legs and prime rib during the first week of April. As of yet, the specific dates have not been designated.

"Breakfast and lunch appear to cater more to the downtown merchants and Longwood faculty," she said. "We notice more Hampden-Sydney and Longwood students during the dinner hours."

"I depend on students not only for business but also as employees. Once the spring semester ends, I don't know what I am going to do. I'll lose three great employees to graduation," Charlie said.

Since just recently opening, "Charlie's has not seized the opportunity to offer special deals or events for the students. However, according to Charlie, she plans on providing "something special" for students next year.

"Charlie's is not like Perini's or MacAdo's but I hope students will try us out," she said. "When you're out see what "Charlie's" has to offer, and don't forget to mention you read about it in The Rotunda!"

"Charlie's is located at 118 West Third Street. Hours are 7 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., Monday through Saturday. Currently closed on Sundays, "Charlie's" will be offering a special Sunday Brunch to be served on Mother's Day, Easter Sunday and on the weekends of both Longwood and Hampden-Sydney graduations.

Longwood Celebrates National Library Week

By TRAVIS GRIFFIN
Staff Reporter

Longwood College celebrated National Library Week on Sunday, April 5, by holding a book-reading ceremony at the Longwood College Library Atrium.

The ceremony was convened by a wind ensemble performing Renaissance and Baroque style music. This performance was enacted by Carolyn DeWolfe of the Learning Center, Jean and Mary Murphy of the Library Staff, and Joe Murphy of the Longwood Bookstore.

There was a large variety of books laid out on tables all through the library atrium. The books laid out included everything from children's books to how-to books, from biographical books to novels. These books were for the audience to browse through both before and after the ceremony.

Hosting the ceremony was Rebecca Laine, Acting Director, of the Longwood Library. She began the ceremony by making some opening remarks to the audience about what was to come. She also commented about the importance of books. Laine noted that Longwood's book budget was restored by 95 percent this year after taking a dramatic plummet last year. She also noted that there were many new and classic books available on the tables for anyone who wished to purchase one.

The ceremony consisted of speakers reading or reciting selected sections of their favorite books.

The first speaker was Frank Howe, who works for the Department of Education. Mr. Howe read from his favorite book, Harper Lee's To Kill A Mockingbird. He read the very ending of the book but ensured the audience that it would not ruin the rest of the book.

The second speaker was Dr. Elisabeth Flynn, an Art Professor at Longwood. Flynn read quotes from John W. Dixon's Art and the Theological Imagination. She said that this is the book that she most wishes she had written. The major thesis of this book was expressed in this quote: "Art is not an element in an existing world, it is a primary element in shaping that world." Dr. Flynn shares the same sentiment as Dixon that people who are not involved in the making of art should make more of an effort to understand it and not just pass it off as unimportant.

The third speaker was senior Marianne Moffat. Moffat read from the children's book, The Wind and the Willows by Kenneth Grahame. She read a conversation between the river rat and the mole in the book.

The fourth speaker was Dr. Craig Challender, an English Professor at Longwood. Dr. Challender read passages from Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass. Dr. Challender read these passages in such a way that made it very interesting and moving.

The fifth speaker was Christy McDonald, a sophomore English major at Longwood. McDonald has won several awards for her story-telling. McDonald read the entire book, Flossie and the Fox, by Paty McKissack. The best thing about her storytelling is her interpretation of the voices and accents of the characters in the book.

The sixth speaker was Dr. Mike Lund, an English Professor at Longwood. Dr. Lund read passages from Eric Kraft's Little Follies: The Personal History, Adventures, Experiences of Peter Leroy (So Far).

The seventh and final speaker was Dr. Kevin Dunn, Chemistry Professor at Hampden-Sydney College. Dr. Dunn recited Dr. Seuss's The Sneetches. This presentation was the most unique because he used visual aids to accompany his recitation. Dr. Dunn used two contraptions that would change plain pieces of cardboard to pieces with stars on them and vice-versa. Everyone obviously enjoyed it and most seemed to view it as the highlight of the ceremony. The production ran very smoothly and was extremely interesting, informative, and entertaining.

After the ceremony was an informal reception. During this time, audience members and speakers were treated to one of Professor Maria Silveira's famous cakes.

Sugar Hollow Reservoir provides good spots for fishing.

Spring Provides Good Fishing

By EDDIE MONGER
Staff Writer

Early springtime is a great time to fish. With warmer weather, fish become more active and are hungry.

Trout season opened in designated waters of Virginia on March 21. I spent a couple of hours at Sugar Hollow Reservoir in Albemarle County that day. Sugar Hollow has a good population of trout. It's stocked with brook and rainbow trout, and has some native trout.

Hundreds of people lined the shore and waited for 9 a.m. (the season officially opened at that time). Anglers fished with salmon eggs, corn, marshmallows, Berkley Power Bait, mealworms, earthworms, spinners, and artificial flies. Most of the trout were being caught with corn or a combination of mealworms and Power Bait.

Many farm ponds throughout Virginia provide great fishing. These small, private ponds are sometimes inhabited by monster fish.

On a warm and sunny day, in early March, I went fishing with my brother-in-law at a small pond behind his house. I was fishing for crappie and using a 1/32 oz. crappie jig that was white. Crappie are related to the sunfish family and are quite tasty. Crappie are also referred to as "specs", "silvers," and "silver perch."

Anyhow, I was having a good time and was catching a lot of small fish. I would cast my jig out into the deep water, let it sink for a few seconds, and then reel the lure in slowly. The fish would usually strike the jig as it fell to the bottom. However, the biggest fish inhaled the lure when it drifted over a sunken log that was about 10 feet from the shore. The fish put up a spectacular fight and when I landed it, the crappie weighed a little over two pounds.

During Spring Break, I had several opportunities to go fishing. I fished at several local ponds in Albemarle County. I had the most luck using the crappie jigs. I also caught several nice largemouth bass using those lures.

Several of Virginia's state record fish were caught in early spring. Richard Tate caught the Virginia state record largemouth bass on April 16, 1985 at Lake Conner. The lunker bass weighed in at 16 pounds, 4 ounces. On April 27, 1986, Michael Mills caught a record sunfish (from a private pond) that weighed 4 pounds, 12 ounces. On April 18, 1987, Jeff Bates caught a record crappie that weighed 4 pounds, 3 ounces. Bates caught the fish at Gaston Reservoir.

Early spring is a great time to go fishing, but then again, anytime is a great time to fish.

Lesbian Films Draw Protest At University of North Florida

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (CPS) — Two lesbian documentaries were shown at the University of North Florida despite protests by a Christian organization and threats of a lawsuit by a student.

One student, Kelley Copeland, hired an attorney to oppose the showing of the documentaries "Out of Suburbia: The Stories of Eleven Lesbians," and "Seventeen Rooms (or What Do Lesbians Do in Bed?)," which were shown March 18 at the Women's Center.

Besides Copeland, the Christian Coalition of Duval County also objected to the showing of the film and sent protesters to the center the evening of the showing.

"The issue was academic freedom and diversity on campus," said Shirley Webb, acting director of the Women's Center, who said that the administration had no hesitation about showing the films.

Webb said school officials were surprised by the number of favorable calls and letters they received in favor of showing the films.

"We had a huge crowd, so huge we had to move it. The original room held 60 people. We moved it to a room that held 250 people and had standing room only," Webb said.

"We had a lively discussion and debate, people asked questions like, 'Why are you showing these films?' It was what a university is all about: dialogue, discussion and education, an exchange of ideas," Webb said.

Copeland's attorney, Jeffrey Wood, told The Associated Press that his client objected to the use of public funds to promote an "abnormal lifestyle" and questioned the relevance of the films to women's history.

Steve Dealph came to Longwood College as the Greek Affairs Coordinator in 1990. He acts as the official liaison between the college administration and all of the recognized fraternities and sororities on campus.

Dealph is a graduate of the University of Southern Indiana, where he was initiated into the fraternity of Lambda Chi Alpha in 1983.

Dealph attended graduate school at Bowling Green State University in Ohio, where he received his masters degree in College Student Personnel.

His main duties consist of advising IFC (Inter Fraternity Council), Panhellenic Council, Black Greek Council, and Order of Omega.

In addition to all of those duties, Dealph also works with individual chapters on programs, workshops, and leadership development. He is in charge of the Resident Assistant (RA) selection process, and advises Judicial Board.

Dealph also assists with Greek weekend, Greek awards night, Order of Omega, Rho Chi training, chapter philanthropy projects, and rush.

Dealph feels that the Greek system here at Longwood has gone through some positive changes. The makeup of IFC and Panhellenic Council have doubled. Disaffiliation throughout rush has been increased, and open parties with kegs have been abolished.

Dealph finished by saying that "Although I have made a lot of changes within the Greek system, they have been very supportive of me, and eager to excel as a Greek community."

Several cadets, led by Captain Gary Wittekind, examine one of the cannon emplacements at Petersburg National Battlefield Park.

ROTC Cadets Visit Battlefield

By JAMES K. JOHNSON
ASST. EDITOR

On March 7 the ROTC department led a small group of cadets to the Petersburg National Battlefield. The group was led by Captain Gary Whittekind.

The tour lasted for several hours, and was designed to give cadets a better understanding of the events leading up to the siege of Petersburg and its final outcome. The tour was a one day event. It was highlighted by a detailed explanation of the whole battle, and a walk to the Battle of the Crater.

The battle for Petersburg began in June 1864 and was part of General U.S. Grant's plan of attrition against the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia. The seige would last a gruesome 10 1/2 months and would be a disaster for the South.

Grant's strategy was simple, since he realized that the key to taking Richmond lay in the capture of Petersburg. Petersburg itself contained four railroad lines and housed several key roads that were utilized by the South. These rails and roads provided Richmond with supplies, equipment, munitions, and rations. Many critics believed that if Richmond fell then the war would soon be over.

Grant however believed that the only way of defeating the South was the elimination of General Robert E. Lee's army. Grant soon encircled the city and cut Lee's supply lines thus, the longest siege in American warfare began.

One of the highlights of the battle was the creation of the Crater and the story behind it. Not long after the siege began, soldiers of the 48th Pennsylvania infantry, many ex-coal miners, began to dig a tunnel toward a Confederate held fort. The plan was to explode four tons of gunpowder under the fort and send a large number of troops into the gap created in the enemy's defenses by the explosion. If the plan was to succeed, Petersburg would be captured in a short time and thus the war would soon be over.

The tunnel took a month to dig and was 511 feet long, and had lateral galleries at the end to hold the explosive gunpowder. When the explosion took place on the morning of July 30, it destroyed a Confederate artillery battery and left in the earth a crater 170 feet long, 60 feet wide, and 30 feet deep.

The Union troops began to plunge directly into the crater and thus blundered badly since their original plan called for them to go around the Crater. Soon a Confederate counterattack retook the crater and inflicted 4,000 casualties on Federal forces.

The siege continued and many Union officers were criticized and removed from command. Before the fall of Petersburg, Lee would be successful in escaping and retreating with his forces; however, it would not be long before the eventual surrender at Appomattox.

Another treat that cadets were exposed to was a tour of the U.S. Army's Quartermaster Museum. This museum is located on Fort Lee.

The museum houses a multitude of U.S. Army relics and memorabilia dating from the Revolutionary War to Operation Desert Storm. The museum has many highlights such as the original jeep used by General George S. Patton, Jr. in World War Two, a full scale army supply wagon, and an array of original military uniforms and weapons.

The Quartermaster Corps, founded two days after the creation of the Army in 1775, is the oldest service corps in the U.S. Army today. Through the years the Corps has been accountable for almost every service function including: food, clothing, transportation, aerial supply, petroleum supply, and finally mortuary services.

In 1941 Camp Lee was designated as the Chief Quartermaster training center, and in 1962 Fort Lee became the U.S. Army's Quartermaster Center.

Players Perform Wilde's Importance of Being Earnest

By ROSEANN PITZL
Staff Reporter

The Longwood Players will perform Oscar Wilde's classic comedy The Importance of Being Earnest this week on Wednesday through Saturday, April 8-11.

Curtain will be at 8 p.m. on all nights, and Friday's performance will be signed for the deaf. General admission will be $5; $3 for Longwood employees, area students and senior citizens; free to Longwood students with ID.

Douglas Simes, an actor, teacher and singer from New York City will be the guest director of Earnest.

Simes, a 43 year old graduate of the Yale School of Drama, has had a number of roles including parts in "All My Children," and "Ryan's Hope," as well as an appearance in the South Jersey Regional Theatre performance of Educating Rita. He played Mr. Frank in the Barter Theatre in Abingdon's production of The Diary of Anne Frank, and appeared in Stage Struck, of the same company.

Simes became acquainted with Longwood after meeting Speech and Theatre faculty member Pamela Arkin. Arkin had taken a group of students to the Barter Theatre production of The Foreigner, a play which she later directed at Longwood.

Simes came to Longwood last spring as one of two persons who assess the work of theatre department performance majors. He has returned to direct this Victorian comedy, as well as teach a five week, one-credit-course called Elements of Scene Work.

The Importance of Being Earnest is set in London and Hertford in July of 1895, and is a satire about the leisure class that resides there. The cast consists of eight Longwood students.

David Richards and Rick Codding play the debonair young bachelors. Algernon Moncrieff and John Worthing. The "visible" personification of absolute perfection." Cecile Cardew, is played by Teresa Goding, and Kate Dunnet plays the witty and elegant Gwendolyn Fairfax. Ann Helm is Miss Prism, Cecily's governess, and Daniel Ellis has a double role as butler and manservant.

Jonathan Church is the footman, and Pamela Arkin is the formidable matriarch of the Fairfax family, Lady Brackenell. Another staff member at Longwood, Hal Sherman, portrays the devout and meticulous Rev. Canon Chasuble.

Simes is excited about the play, which has been called "the most perfect play ever written." Of Earnest, he stated, "The irony is blunt. There are no wasted words, no wasted actions. It's nonsentimental, but also wonderfully, scathingly funny. It's a send-up of a comedy of manners." It is a "satire of the leisure class," and contains a lot of "farce and deception."

"I had never acted in or directed this show before now," Simes states. "It's so good. I wish I had discovered it sooner."

Set and lighting design are by Kent Buess, a graduate student in Theatre at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

British College Students Visiting

By LINDA M. NYGAARD

"Who is that? I didn't notice her in this class before... Who is he? Have I been absent that much?"

For those of you taking education classes who might have noticed a few new faces in your classes, you may have asked yourself some of these questions. In answer, there are now eight student teachers at Longwood College who just arrived from Great Britain.

The students are part of a student exchange program that the Longwood Education Department is sponsoring with Radford University and Averett College. Just about the time most of us were starting to think about returning from spring break, the British students arrived at Dulles Airport on March 21. The students were brought back to Farmville, where the next day they were able to meet many of the Longwood students also involved in the program.

Many of the Longwood student teachers who are in the exchange program agreed to host British students during their stay at Longwood. In return, many of these British students will be hosting the Longwood students when they visit England.

During the British student teachers' three weeks at Longwood, they will be visiting various school systems with their hosting student teacher. These ventures will provide the students with the opportunity to observe and participate in American school classrooms.

On the other hand, there are 12 Longwood College students who will later be departing for England. The students which are involved in this educational experience are Karen Cunningham, Marcy Dudley, Wendi Dudley, Beth Hedrick, Allison McConchie, Linda Nygaard, Nancy Patrick, Mary Shriner, Amy Taylor, Kevin Washington, William Wells, and Linda Wright.

These 12 Longwood students will be departing for England in May. There are additionally 12 students from Radford University participating in the program, but they will be departing a week prior to Longwood students.

While Radford University students will be attending the University of Nottingham, Longwood students will be going to Derbyshire College. During their time at the colleges, the students will have the experience to observe and teach in British classrooms for approximately two to three weeks. To help the students along in this educational process, Dr. Betty Jo Simmons, Professor of Education, will be accompanying the students and will be supervising their teaching experiences in the classrooms.

Costs of the program require that students pay for round-trip airfare, meals, college administrative fees, and, of course, spending money. Housing is taken care of for the students, because they will be staying in college dorms with British students or with sponsoring families in the area.

To help with the expenses of the experience, there have been two notable Longwood contributions made. Dean Sue Saunders and Mrs. Mary Kaye Benton Cochran contributed $1,000 from the "Opening Doors to the World" project. Additionally, the Education Department contributed $200. The total of $1,200 is being used to help Longwood students to pay the airfare, resulting in each student's ticket price being reduced by $100.

Education students who believe they would be interested in participating in a Longwood exchange program should discover their options early, so that plans can be made. There are currently potential plans being made for educational opportunities in Honduras next year.

Longwood Center Offers Help To Area Businesses

By JULIE TATE
Staff Reporter

The Longwood Small Business Development Center (LSBDC) is a nonprofit organization which offers assistance to Virginia area businesses. They help businesses in four cities and 15 counties to expand their current establishment, start a new business, or solve problems related to their business.

Funding for the LSBDC comes from Longwood College, the U.S. Small Business Administration, and the Virginia Department of Economic Development.

The LSBDC was one of the first centers named by Governor Gerald Baliles as a leader in the new Virginia Small Business Development Centers Program in 1989.

The center is located on Main Street near Longwood's high rise dormitories. The staff includes four full-time positions: Mr. Jerry Hughes, Executive Director; Ms. Debbie Epperson, Deputy Director; Mr. Hank Kim, Systems Analyst; and Mr. Carroll Thackston, Business Analyst for the South Boston Branch. In addition, several interns work in the Center. They work with approximately 50 clients per quarter.

A new client first sets down with one of the directors and gives general information about their business and the problems they are facing. A business plan is then drawn up which gives the client details on how to improve their operations. Depending on the type of business, it takes anywhere from two weeks to a month to create a business plan.

Some faculty members volunteer their time to help with client cases and do research projects as well.

The LSBDC has an outstanding reputation in the areas of financial analysis, business plan preparation, and capital formation. It also offers many services such as resource guides, industry comparisons, productivity improvement materials, workshops, and networking assistance.

Twenty-five workshops were held last year with over 300 people attending. Workshop coverage included: how to start a business, how to market a business, business plans, advertising, and the recession.

Internships with the LSBDC are a great opportunity for students to apply the knowledge and skills they have learned.

Interns work with a variety of businesses from hair salons to small manufacturing corporations. They learn how to create a spreadsheet, income statement and balance sheet, cashflow statement, and the calculation of the break-even point. They cover all areas of the business and learn where the figures come from. They also learn how to do brochures and surveys for the business.

There are currently sixteen interns, eleven from Longwood and five from Hampden-Sydney. More interns are needed for the upcoming semester and interested students may contact their business professor.

Those interested must have a minimum 2.5 cumulative GPA, work experience, knowledge of WordPerfect, Lotus, and the mainframe. Interns receive three credits and are graded on their performance. They must work six hours a week which are set according to their schedules.

The LSBDC encourages students and professors to become more involved in the program because of the great opportunities it offers and chance to gain experience in the students specific field of study.

Bush Pledges To Build Aid Programs; Buchanan Silent

By JEFF GOLDFARB
CPS Washington Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is one in a series on the presidential candidates, focusing on their views about higher education.

WASHINGTON (CPS) — It has been four years since George Bush claimed that he was going to be the "education president." Though his record since 1988 has been criticized, President Bush has pledged to build financial aid programs and fight political correctness on college campuses if elected this year.

Bush's budget proposal for next year includes a $6.6 billion request for Pell Grants, a 22 percent increase from 1992. Though the president has claimed to oppose entitlements, he said his proposed Pell Grant allocation provides enough funding for a maximum grant of $3,700, a figure $1,300 higher than this year.

Also, in Bush's budget proposal, loan limits on guaranteed student loans are increased, the interest on student loans become deductible for federal income tax and no-penalty withdrawals from Individual Retirement Accounts when funds are used for education become permissible. He also supports raising the ceiling for Pell Grants to families making up to $50,000 a year.

Bush does not support direct loan proposals. He has said reauthorizing current student loan programs is better than trying to revamp the system with direct loans and has expressed consistent support for broadening the guaranteed student loan programs.

Bush told The Chronicle of Higher Education that he thinks that students with good grades should get larger grants. His proposed "Presidential Achievement Scholarship" would offer $500 to Pell Grant recipients who maintained good grades in high school and college.

"Common sense tells us that tying performance to reward is an effective way to motivate our children to strive for higher achievement," he said.

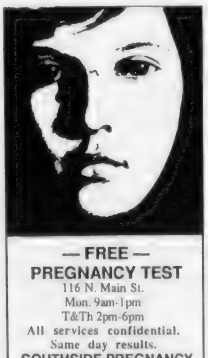
President Bush has said he opposes giving federal financial aid in return for community service. He claims such a tool would "preclude" some students from receiving aid if they could not perform such service.

With regard to political correctness issues, Bush says he adamantly opposes the movement. "On too many campuses, an atmosphere of real intolerance for dissenting or unfashionable political opinions has developed," he said in a White House release, citing speech codes, one-sided curriculum requirements and limited guest lectures as part of the problem.

He expanded on his concern about PC in The Chronicle: "It's ironic that at the same time the rest of the world is throwing open its doors — and universities — to democratic values, some U.S. students are being prevented from sampling the wares for a free and open marketplace of ideas.

"Intending to correct past injustices, political correctness all too often has the effect of replacing old prejudices with new ones."

Concerning overall education issues, President Bush has focused attention on his America 2000 initiative and his Head Start programs. By the year 2000, the president said he hopes that every adult American will be literate and have "skills necessary to compete in a global economy and exercise the rights and responsibilities of citizenship."



Campaign staff for Pat Buchanan, Bush's chief Republican opposition, did not respond to repeated requests for background information on his views on higher education or to requests for an interview with the candidate.

However, Buchanan released the following statement about his views on public education.

"American education is in a state of decline, largely the result of an ever-increasing education bureaucracy, and a lack of competition within the system. From affirmative action in hiring, to busing for racial balance and assaults on uniform, standard testing, too much ideologically motivated experientation has been inflicted on public schools.

"To revitalize American education, we need vouchers to allow parents to send their children to schools of their choice. This will create market pressures on education at the local level to produce what students need most — real learning.

"In addition, local education officials need the authority to hire and fire teachers and the flexibility to respond to parental concerns over the curricula. Teachers, administrators and principals who fail to deliver the quality demanded and expected by parents must be held accountable."

Taylor Named Player Of The Week

TERRY TAYLOR

Junior third baseman Terry Taylor, who batted .500 and drove in eight runs in four games last week, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period March 29-April 4. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

For the week, Taylor had five hits in 10 trips to the plate, drove in eight runs, scored six and ripped a pair of homers. Taylor raised his batting average 30 points, from .261 to .291. On the year, he has five homers, three doubles, 26 runs and 27 RBI. The team leader in sacrifice flies with four, he's also tied for the lead in walks with 18 and has stolen 11 bases in 15 attempts.

"Terry has been under a lot of pressure," said coach Buddy Bolding. "Dating back to the end of last season, he had been hitting the ball hard, but usually right at somebody. He has worked his way through a long dry spell. Hopefully, he's back on track now."

Taylor's fifth homer came with two outs and two men on base in the first inning of the Lancers' 8-3 win over North Carolina A&T Saturday. Bolding called the hit a key to the first game victory. He added a run-scoring single and a sacrifice fly for five RBI in the game. Longwood, 18-7 with four straight wins, beat A&T 5-2 in the second game.

A .336 career hitter at Longwood, Taylor is a graduate of Jefferson Forest High School. With 16 career homers, he's now tied for eighth on the Lancers' all-time list. He's also got 94 career RBIs. Taylor is majoring in management information systems.

Baseball Team Wins Four In A Row

Paced by junior Terry Taylor and freshman pitcher Bart van Zoest, Longwood won four straight games on the diamond last week, sweeping twin bills from Oneonta State and North Carolina A&T for a season record of 18-7.

The Lancers, ranked 23rd in last week's Collegiate Baseball Division II poll, beat Oneonta 16-8 and 16-5 Tuesday and swept North Carolina A&T 8-3 and 5-2 in Greensboro Saturday. Taylor hit .500 for the week, driving in eight runs, scoring six and ripping a pair of homers. Van Zoest, a lefthander, got two victories, throwing a complete game against Oneonta (a 16-5 Lancer win) and pitching two shutout innings in Saturday's nightcap at A&T for his second win.

All-American Mike Tucker also had a good week with three homers (he has 13 for the year) and six RBIs. He's hitting .465 with 36 RBIs for the season. Other Lancer leaders are freshmen Jeff Toms and Chris Tyson who are batting .400, senior Scott Abel, .374, seven doubles, eight homers and 33 RBI and junior Shawn Jones, .293, seven homers, 19 RBIs and 14-14 in stolen bases.

Chris Mullins, 4-2 with a 3.67 earned run average tops the pitching staff.

This week, Longwood is scheduled to visit St. Paul's Thursday and Virginia State Friday for doubleheaders, before hosting A&T Saturday and Maryland Eastern Shore Sunday at Golubic Stadium in Crewe. All four twin bills are slated to begin at 1:00.

Longwood Sweeps A&T Sat.

Taylor hit a 3-run homer and drove in five runs as the Lancers beat A&T 8-3. Tucker added a homer and Kyle Weaver pitched five innings to move his win-loss record to 4-3. Mullins pitched the final two frames.

In the second game Todd Bowman hit a two-run homer in the first as Longwood held on for a 5-2 triumph. Longwood scored three runs in the top of the sixth, using four walks, a single by Tucker and a run-scoring hit by Chris Porter to beat A&T. Van Zoest (3-1) shut down the host team in the fifth and sixth innings, allowing one hit and striking out two.

"Bart did a great job for us," said Lancer coach Buddy Bolding. "I'm very pleased with him. He's learning."

Lancers Use Long Ball to Beat Oneonta

Longwood played long-ball last Tuesday against visiting Oneonta of New York and the result was a 16-8, 16-5 shellacking of the Dragons at Golubic Stadium in Crewe. Longwood collected 15 hits and five homers to win Tuesday's opening contest. Two homers by Mike Tucker boosted his season total to 12. Scott Abell hit his eighth and Shawn Jones his seventh.

Freshman Ben Fischoff had a day he'll long remember with two doubles, a homer and four RBIs in three trips to the plate. Normally a reserve catcher, Fischoff played most of the game at second base and performed well, after taking extra batting practice late Monday afternoon. He hit a 3-run homer, his first, in the sixth.

The beneficiary of the Lancer offensive showing was pitcher Wayne Weaver, 2-0, who went the distance despite giving up 12 hits to the Dragons.

Taylor, John Hutzler and Bill Reeves hit 3-run homers as Longwood took a 13-2 lead after three innings and coasted to a 16-5 victory in the nightcap. Reeves' homer was the first of his college career. Hutzler was 3-3 with four RBIs, Jeff Toms 3-3 with four runs and Abell went 2-3 with two RBIs.

Van Zoest pitched seven innings to notch his second complete game win of the season. He allowed 10 hits, walked five and struck out three.

Softball Sweeps Ferrum, Falls In Tournament

By Greg Prouty

Longwood's softball team swept a doubleheader from Ferrum last Tuesday before traveling to Greensboro, N.C over the weekend to participate in the Fifth UNCG Invitational Tournament, where they dropped four games to see their season record fall to 7-9.

The Lady Lancers lost the first three contests on Friday by a total of five runs. They fell to UNC Wilmington 6-4 in the opener; 5-3 to California (Pa.), an NCAA Division II Top Twenty Program; then 8-7 to Barton to close out first day play. On Saturday morning, Longwood was defeated by the host UNC Greensboro 11-1. UNCG went on to share the tournament title with Cal (Pa.) as the championship game was halted by rain after five innings knotted at 3-3.

Longwood led UNC Wilmington 2-0 after three innings and 4-3 after five before allowing three runs in the sixth to drop a close 6-4 decision. Seniors Chris Gronke and Cassie Mullenix were both 2-3, with Mullenix adding two RBIs. Sophomore Andrea Wrenn took the mound loss yielding nine hits, five earned runs, and two walks.

The Lady Lancers managed just four hits in dropping another close 5-3 decision to powerful California. Senior Laura Marks had an RBI double in the first inning as LC led 2-1 after one. Junior Kathy Brown suffered the pitching loss allowing seven hits, five earned runs, and five walks.

Longwood led Barton 2-0 early before giving up six runs in the fourth inning. Longwood got four runs back in the fifth and tied the game at 7-7 in the sixth only to see BC rally in their last at bat to gain the victory. Freshman Kirsten Reller was 3-3 with two RBIs for LC, while Marks was 2-4. Wrenn took the loss, allowing 10 hits, five earned runs, five walks, and striking out two. Wrenn's record is now 2-5 on the season.

In the 11-1 loss to UNCG Longwood managed just four singles off Spartan pitcher Winn Hazelgrove, a feshman from nearby Cumberland High School. Hazelgrove was named the tournament's MVP after posting five victories with 20 strikeouts in the tourney. Freshmen Mari Willen was 3-3 and Lorri Payne 1-2. Brown (4-4) took the pitching loss.

Longwood 16, 11 - Ferrum 2,1

In Tuesday's opener, the Lady Lancers jumped to an early 4-0 lead in the first inning as Marks, who was 4-4 with two home runs, five runs and eight RBIs on the afternoon, blasted a grand slam following walks to LC's first three hitters. Longwood added three runs in the second as Marks added a two-run single scoring sophomore Ana Litton and Willen.

The Lady Lancers scored a single run in the third, two in the fourth, then exploded for six in the fifth to seal the win. Longwood's fifth-inning runs came on the strength of a triple by Mullenix, a double by Gronke, and singles by Marks, Litton and junior Jen Brady. All came around to score, as did Payne who reached on a walk.

In the second game, Longwood scored two in the second inning, four in the third, one in the fourth, and four in the fifth. Marks hit a two-run homer in the second inning following a single by Gronke.

Mullenix hit a two-run double in the third after Payne opened with a double, Litton singled, and Marks walked. Marks and Mullenix scored on a double by junior Tara Confalone. Willen singled in the fourth and scored on a double by Gronke.

Payne's double in the fifth scored Confalone and freshman Becky Condrey. Litton then sacrificed in Reller before Willen's triple scored Payne with the game's final run.

Through 16 games, Marks leads the Lady Lancers in hitting at .420, with two home runs and 20 RBIs, both tops on the team. Gronke is batting .391, and Willen .373 with three triples and 13 RBIs. Payne has a team-leading four doubles, while Litton is 11-12 in stolen ases.

Longwood is off until Saturday when they host Virginia Wesleyan at 1:30 in the final home game of 1991 at Farmville's Armory Field.

PART II:

Reflections Of A Road Trip

By CHRISTOPHER MULLINS
Staff Writer

Christopher Mullins is a senior pitcher for the Lancers. The following article is a journal account of a recent baseball team trip. It will be published over several issues.

10:25 a.m.– Todd, Mark Simon, and myself return from Burger King, only to find out our game is canceled because the field is too wet to play on. Coach tells us we have practice at 4:00, so we can now do whatever until 4:00.

3:45 p.m. – We leave for practice following a day of nothing. We watched TV and played video games all day. The atmosphere isn't right for studying, so we basically just killed time.

6:00 p.m. – Back to the Ho Jo Inn. We dropped about half the team off at "the mall." The mall is about two miles from where we are staying, so Coach dropped them off with the intent of going back to pick them up. The mall is a way for us to get away from the hotel, the bus, and baseball for an hour or two. It's quite refreshing sometimes, but tonight I came back to the hotel to watch Duke vs. Virginia, on ESPN.

6:30 p.m. – The other half of us go to Quincy's Family Steakhouse again. The all-you-can-eat buffet has a good variety, so you can eat something different every night.

8:00 p.m. – Mark Simon, Todd, Benm Fischoff, John Daniel, and myself return from dinner to the hotel. After we all go our separate ways to our rooms, Todd and I get ready for the UVA game. Wrong. Todd is dead asleep by nine, so I end up watching the game myself. I was asleep by 12 o'clock. I guess the road is already catching up with us.

Thursday, Feb. 27

8:30 a.m. – Our wake-up call comes and we're up this time. After showering and getting our uniforms on, Mark, Todd and I go to Shoney's for and all-you-can eat breakfast bar. What a waste. Knowing I have to pitch the second game today (we're playing a make-up doubleheader) my appetite is hiding somewhere. I eat enough breakfast, but not enough to hold me over until 9 p.m., our next meal.

11:00 a.m. – We leave for Francis Marion College which is about 15 minutes from our hotel.

11:15 a.m. – We arrive at the field for batting practice (BP). Doing the age-old pitching ritual, I shag fly-balls in the 70 degree weather God blessed us with. Following B.P., I stretch and jog, trying to settle down and relax. Relaxing is important when you are a pitcher because you need to save up all of your energy. Pitching is both mentally and physically demanding, because you are the center of attention.

1:00 p.m. – The first pitch of the 1992 season is thrown. Being the visiting team, we hit first. Believe it or not, I cannot remember if the first pitch was a ball or a strike. I guess it was because it snuck up on me. I was in the middle of my pre-game prayer (or plea) begging the Big Man for a win. He obliged. We won 11-10 in the 11th inning.

4:30 p.m. – After a very long first game, it is time to get warmed up for the second game. I was having mixed feelings. I was very excited to pitch, but Francis Marion seemed to be good hitters. I guess you'd call it fear of failure. That fear lasted until my first step onto the mound in the game.

5:00 p.m. – The second game starts, I notice something is missing. Not the umpires. Not the other team. Not Coach Bolding. Not the 20 professional scouts who came to see Mike Tucker, Scott Abell, etc. It was the crowd, or at least the student section. The first game hosted about 150 fans (a lot for college baseball), 100 of whom which were students. They were an effective crowd. They were all over Terry Taylor (third baseman) and Tucker (shortstop). The students sat right behind the foul fence up the third base line, so Taylor and Tuck were easy pickings. This journal is rated PG-13, so I cannot tell you what they said. I was kind of hoping they would ride me, so I could feel like the enemy. I like that feeling, it seems to bring the best out of me.

7:50 p.m. – The winning run scored, for them. They had won in the bottom of the seventh with two out. We led 2-1 in the last inning, but they pulled it out. I had mixed feelings about my performance, but the bottom line is we lost.

8:30 p.m. – After showering, Todd and I ordered pizza. While we were waiting, I called my dad and told him the news. He was disappointed, but very supportive.

11:00 p.m. – The two old men fall asleep.

Women Ruggers Stomp Ivy League

Longwood's women's rugby team traveled to the University of Virginia last weekend to participate in the 16th annual UVA Women's Invitational Tournament.

On Saturday the women ruggers faced Princeton University, a team that had not only scored on this formerly undefeated team but soundly beat them 4-0.

Tara Popperwill, one of the team's newest members, made the only try of the game.

On Sunday morning Longwood faced Emory University. It was clear from the beginning that Longwood was the dominant team. Scores made by Angie Sullivan and Ann Callaham and a conversion kick by Missy Greene led the lady ruggers to stomp Emory 32-0!

The only loss of the weekend was to the University of Virginia who placed second of the 14 teams participating in the tournament.

This was the last game for four graduating players: Nicole Lenhardt, Angie Sullivan, Ann Callaham, and Krissy Parker. Even though Longwood will miss these valuable members they are looking forward to a winning season next fall.

Lancer Golfers Beat Two

Sparked by 3-over-par 72's from Frank Davide and Steve Crute, Longwood won a three-team men's golf match last Wednesday at Longwood Golf Course, shooting a 297 to beat Hampden-Sydney (318) and Newport News Apprentice (322).

The Lancers, now 4-2 for the year in match play, got scores of 75 from Jimmy Ward and 78 from Shawn Moore to back the showing of Crute and Davide. Jeff Smiley and Steve Smith shot noncounting scores of 79.

Medalist for the day was Cory Reeves of Newport News Apprentice who shot an even-par 69. Hampden-Sydney was led by John Rosenbaum with a 76 and Eric Early with a 79.

"It was a real good day for us," said Longwood coach Steve Nelson. "It looks like we're peaking at just the right time as we head into next week and the state tournament."

Longwood will host seven teams at its own two-day invitational Monday and Tuesday in Clarksville. The Virginia College Division Championship will be Saturday and Sunday in Hot Springs.

Risko, Saunders Unbeaten For Lady Netters

Longwood's women's tennis team dropped its second and third matches of the season by 5-4 scores last week, falling at Christopher-Newport Tuesday and at home against St. Mary's (NC) Wednesday.

The Lady Lancers are 1-3, but all three losses have come by 5-4 scores. In the losses to CNC and St. Mary's, Longwood won three singles matches and one doubles.

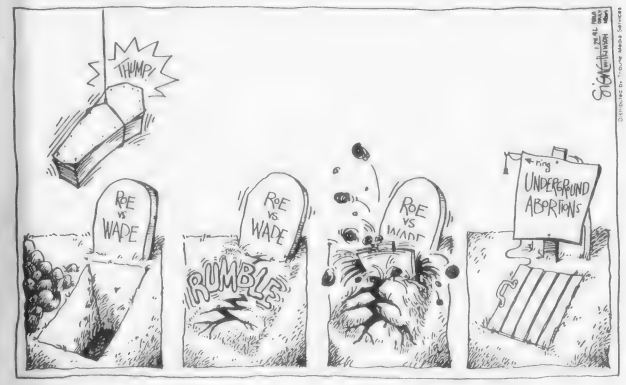
Winners for Longwood Wednesday were Jenny Holm and Melanie Saunders at No. 1 and 2 singles and Jennifer Risko at No. 5. Risko also teamed with Kimber Bear to win at No. 2 doubles. Tuesday, Saunders, Risko and No. 4 Darcy Rodrigues took singles wins and Risko and Bear were victorious at No. 2 doubles.

Both Saunders and Risko are unbeaten in singles this spring with 4-0 records. Including fall results, Saunders is 10-0 for the year and Risko 10-1.

Longwood's match at Southern Seminary Saturday was postponed. The Lady Lancers host Virginia Wesleyan Thursday at 2:00 and visit Meredith Friday for a 2:30 match.

Mens' Tennis Wins Three In A Row

Bouncing back from a 0-3 start, Longwood has won its last three contests in men's tennis for a 3-3 record heading into a match at Virginia State Wednesday at 1:30. The Lancers host Hampden-Sydney Friday at 3:00.



Last week Longwood swept all three doubles matches and five of six singles Tuesday to down visiting Ferrum 8-1 and came back Friday to nip visiting Newport News Apprentice 5-4.

Singles winners against Ferrum were No. 1 Hunter Reynolds, No. 2 Chris Healing, No. 3 Russ Bolen, No. 4 Joel Subido and No. 6 James Whiteree.

Doubles winners were Healing and Bolen at No. 1, Reynolds and Subido at No. 2 and Kevin Jarrell and Brian Hill at No. 3.

THE ROTUNDA

VOL. 71, NO. 18 | LONGWOOD COLLEGE | APRIL 15, 1992

The Court Case: What's At Stake?

By AMY REYNOLDS

(CPS) — While many college students across the country celebrate Earth Day on April 22, thousands of others will look toward the nation's Capitol with concern about an entirely different matter.

On April 22, the U. S. Surpeme Court will begin to hear arguments in a Pennsylvania abortion case that could overturn or more strictly limit existing abortion rights spelled out in Roe v. Wade.

Recent rallies for and against abortion have once again brought the issue to the national spotlight. At the center of the debate this time is the case titled Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey, on which the Surpeme Court will most likely rule in July.

The Pennsylvania law in question requires women to notify their husbands of their decision to have an abortion. Other requirements include a 24-hour waiting period, detailed record-keeping by doctors of each abortion performed, which would be subject to public disclosure, and that doctors tell women about alternatives to abortion and about fetal development.

The appeals court upheld the constitutionality of the Pennsylvania law in all areas except spousal notification, which it said placed an "undue burden" on the woman by taking away her power to decide.

But, on all of the other requirements, the appeals court said that the Pennsylvania law was constitutionally sound, based again on the legal concept of "undue burden."

"Undue burden" is the phrase used most frequently in abortion cases by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. The term refers to a person's power to decide privacy issue for himself or herself.

For example, the court says that spousal notification violates the standard of undue burden because a woman could not obtain an abortion if her husband refused to agree to the procedure.

But, parental notification in the cases of minors does not violate the undue burden standard because every law dealing with parental notification upheld by the court has a clause that gives the minor a way around the notification. In nearly all cases, that loophole is petitioning the court either for permission to get an abortion or for permission to not seek parental approval for an abortion.

According to Ann Massie, law professor at Washington and Lee University, the undue burden standard is the one on which most of the abortion cases hinge.

"What she says and what (the appeals court) means when they cite O'Connor is that if the (abortion) requirement doesn't impose an undue burden on the right of the woman, then the requirement must appear reasonable to the state," Massie says. "If it appears reasonable, then (the requirement) can be upheld. That allows the state wide latitude. But, if it does impose an undue burden, then you have to go back to Roe v. Wade."

Most activists don't expect the Pennsylvania case to overturn Roe v. Wade because of the upcoming election. But the requirements the court is considering in the case are a major departure from the abortion cases heard in the past few years.

Future Promising In Campus Battle

By SARAH DREWRY
Staff Reporter

For college campuses throughout Virginia continuing the battle against alcohol, drugs, and sexual assault, the future holds a promising outlook.

On April 16, 1991, the Governor's Task Force on Substance Abuse and Sexual Assault was created to contest the two interrelated issues. Members of the Task Force (appointed by Governor Wilder) include government representatives, students, state legislators, and law enforcement officials. These members faced the challenges of determining the magnitude of the problems on college campuses in Virginia and addressing them appropriately.

Task Force members concluded that in order to combat these issues effectively, three focus areas must be addressed: Education, Treatment, and Enforcement. Each committee was responsible for discussing and recommending procedures for improving each area on campuses.

Education stands as an important element in the prevention of substance abuse and sexual assault. Some recommendations of the Task Force include: orienting new students about these issues to eliminate stereotypes and myths about these issues, and orienting faculty and staff about policies relating to the problems so that they will be well informed and able to effectively support the program. Fraternities and sororities play a crucial part in education because they can provide leadership and inform students about the program.

Enforcement and Treatment also play an important part in the Task Force program. According to the Task force recommendations, Enforcement depends highly on the level of cooperation between campus police and the law enforcement agencies of adjacent jurisdictions. It is extremely important that these two entities work together with enforcement in order to make progress. Also, the Judicial Board should maximize its effectiveness in dealing with these problems. Treatment should include services for those with a substance abuse problem, as well as those who have been sexually assaulted.

Hopefully for Longwood, this program should prove to be effective. A committee of faculty and staff from Longwood will be chosen in the near future to set up guidelines and direct implementation of the program on Longwood's campus. According to information given by Dr. Jennifer Apperson, Professor of Psychology at Longwood, it looks as though Longwood's committee will be adequately challenged.

Don't Throw Away Earth Day

By LINDA M. NYGAARD
Staff Reporter

Next week you may ask yourself why trash is being dumped onto the normally immaculate lawns of our Longwood campus. The answer, of course, is Earth Day's birthday.

On Wednesday, April 22, it will be 22 years since the first international Earth Day was celebrated. This day was established in the hope that people would become more aware of the problems facing our planet's future, and, as a result, work together toward finding solutions. Today, however, the environmental problems of twenty years ago have only worsened, and the solutions, although identified, have yet to be incorporated by many in their day-to-day lifestyles.

As Earth Day 1992 approaches, colleges and universities are looking toward promoting their environmental science curriculums and student research projects, as well as daily campus events and lectures throughout the week.

For the second consecutive year, the Longwood College Earth Club has planned daily activities for the week beginning Monday, April 20, so that students can come out and celebrate Earth Day. The week is designed to not only be educational, but fun for all who attend.

•On Monday night, April 20, the Earth Club will host the Cafe. A movie, entitled "The Environmental Revolution," will be shown from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m.

•On Tuesday, April 21, any interested students will meet at 12 noon by the fountain, outside The Rotunda, for a "Campus Clean Up Day." On this day, students circulate around the campus, collecting and disposing of trash from around the grounds.

•On Wednesday, April 22, the Earth Club will have informational tables set up around the campus. In addition to various pamphlets and brochures, students may pick up an awareness ribbon to wear for Earth Day.

•Also scheduled for Earth Day, beginning at 7 a.m., is what is being called the "landfill event." For this all-day event, the Earth Club will collect a substantial amount of trash from around the Longwood campus, which they will consequently assemble in a huge pile onto the lawn between Lancaster and North Cunningham. Earth Club members and Longwood volunteers will then search through the pile to find all recyclable items.

At the end of the day, the percentage of all recyclable materials will be calculated. Students will then be able to witness the large amount of recyclable goods that are needlessly being discarded into the trash, and are, therefore, adding waste to already packed landfills in the area. As Jennifer Wyatt, President of the Earth Club, pointed out, this waste could easily be prevented "if people would just take the time to care."

•On Thursday night, April 23, the Earth Club has arranged to have a band from Norfolk, "Dying Echo," play outside on Stubbs Mall. Admission will be free. The band is tentatively scheduled to begin around 7 p.m. Although unconfirmed as of press time, there are arrangements currently in the making for a "surprise band" to also perform that evening.

Looking beyond Earth Week's activities, Longwood will offer a special interest hall for students that are interested in helping out with the environment, recycling materials, and generally maintaining a clean hall. This hall, which the Earth Club applied for, will be on the first floor of Main Cunningham beginning in the fall semester, 1992. Any student that would be interested in living on this hall next semester should notify the Housing Office early, as students will be assigned as space is available.

Longwood, however, is not the only college that is taking measures to save our planet. For example, in 1991 at Clark University in Worcester, Mass., the school founded the George Perkins Marsh Institute, the nation's first university research center devoted to studying the human causes of environmental change and the global responses.

The Institute includes a Center for Technology, Environment and Development; a Center for Land, Water and Society; a Center for Global Urban Studies; and, the Clark Labs for Cartographic Technology and Geographic Analysis.

At Hobart and William Smith Colleges in Geneva, N.Y., several geoscience students are working at various sites across the state to study environmental and geological conditions.

One group is studying the effects of chemical waste believed to be seeping into Seneca Lake from a landfill in the nearby town of Dix. The local community hopes that the students can determine whether toxic chemicals were dumped at the landfill, which has been closed since 1981 after runoff waste was discovered leaking into a popular fishing stream.

A second group is examining the spread of an industrial chemical through the town of LeRoy's water table following a 1970 train derailment that caused 30,000 gallons of trichloroethene to spill. The chemical, which attacks the central nervous system, was washed away rather than properly contained and vacuumed.

At the University of La Verne in California, the school recently established a major in Environmental Management, designed particularly for business students who will soon be dealing with environmental issues at a rapidly increasing rate.

At Abilene Christian University in Texas, the school just added a interdisciplinary class called Environmental and Technological Science, which focuses on several hot environmental topics – from the depletion of the ozone layer and acid rain to the disposal of hazardous waste. All students are required to take the class during their sophomore year.

For those who think that they might be interested in getting involved with the Earth Club at Longwood, students just need to show up at a meeting. The meetings are held every Thursday night at 7 p.m. in the French TV lounge.

Dorrill Details Thoughts On Three Issuses

By TODD BUCHANAN
Staff Reporter

Dr. William F. Dorrill, Longwood's president, was recently interviewed about three issues on campus this semester.

These three issues are: the new interview shows on WLCX; the meningitis scare; and Spring Weekend.

The radio shows, says Dorrill, are really a good idea but what we, as students, must realize is that there are also the opinions of others on the campus. The radio programs should seek a balance between the views of the hosts of the programs and the rest of the Longwood community. He went on to say that the station and its programs definitely adds positively to the variety of activities offered on campus.

Dorrill's reaction to the meningitis scare was somewhat more in depth.

As far as he is aware, this was the first time that Longwood has had to deal with a mass inoculation and we could only learn from our experience. One problem that he touched on involved Virginia's Public Health Department and its "taking over" of the whole inoculation process. Dorrill says that our staff should have shown more assertiveness in dealing with the entire situation.

Furthermore Dorrill attributes the need for the inoculations at Longwood to a previous incident that took place when an individual from Lynchburg College visited Radford University and the disease was spread. Overall Dorrill believes that our people handling the incident did "the best job they could under the circumstances."

As for Spring Weekend, Dorrill agrees that weather was obviously a factor, and has been for a while. He believes that to possibly avoid such inclement weather, a later date for the weekend should be scheduled.

Although Dorrill thinks that Spring Weekend is very worthwhile, it definitely cannot be held indoors if the weather is uncompromising. Finally, Dorrill stated that he was pleased with all the activities that were available on Spring Weekend.

COMMENTARY

EDITORIAL

According to our calculations, there are 457 students at Longwood College. Our basis for this assumption is the number of students who managed to vote in the recent SGA elections.

This number is contrary to the information we have received from the college. According to the administration, there are approximately 3,300 students currently enrolled at Longwood.

This editorial is directed at the 2,400 or so students who didn't care enough to show an interest in their governance system: What in the world is the matter with you? How can you not have an interest in what is going on around you? Don't you people have any brains? Or any desire to control the events around you?

And the really scary thought is that you same ignorant and apathetic lumps are going to (not) vote in future local, state, and, God help us all, national levels.

Perhaps a few of you have an excuse. Deadly illness is acceptable. But a lack of caring is not.

People talk about the ideals of democracy, and condemn those countries who hold their people in political bondage. But too many Americans are in a self-imposed bondage, a bondage whose fetters are forged of ignorance and apathy. We must break free of our bonds and become involved, contributing members of society.

This can be accomplished in a number of ways whose ultimate goal is the creation of an informed and active electorate. The failure of more and more people to even read a newspaper is a symptom of a sick society whose death knell is augured by the election of succeedingly pathetic public officials.

America's obsession with image rather than substance does not bode well for the future of our country. We must learn to look beyond a facade of political correctness in our candidates for office and educate ourselves to explore the issues.

For example, Bill Clinton, the Democratic party front runner, has been touted by some as an ideal candidate for president. But the focus thus far has not been on issues and solutions. Rather it has been on his alleged affair with Genifer Flowers and his experimentation with marijuana while in college.

Who cares? How many of you have experimented with drugs? And as to sex, Bill Clinton is not the first potential or actual U.S. President to have dallied (or in Clinton's case, allegedly dallied) outside the bounds of holy matrimony. John F. Kennedy is rumored to have had Marilyn Monroe (as well as a number of hat-check girls, waitresses, and government workers) as a sexual partner, and Thomas Jefferson's supposed mistress was an African slave known as Sally Hemings.

These two gentlemen are continually ranked by historians as two of the best U.S. Presidents. Thomas Jefferson is considered to be the renaissance man of American colonial times and Jack Kennedy has been almost deified recently. Their personal activities had no bearing on their performances.

Unfortunately, the electorate is blinded by the mudslinging and personal allegations made by battling candidates of both parties, a situation which exacerbates the lack of focus on issues.

However, this situation continues only at the indulgence of the American population. Our ignorance and disinterest as to issues and candidates is seen on all levels, from schoolwide to nationwide elections. Sadly, Longwood students are echoing a national trend of uninvolvement.

There are a few exceptions, however. Most notable in our mind is Mark Tuetting, a Longwood student whose political involvement is extensive. Not only does he take an active role in campus governance, Mark has recently become a delegate to the Virginia presidential caucus. We need more people who seize their futures and who will definitely make a difference.

And to the rest of you lemmings, take a hint and make your own future. Don't leave such important decisions as who makes the rules that govern your life to someone you don't even know.

NEWS BRIEFS FROM AROUND THE COUNTRY

Argument Results In Racial Brawl

OLIVET, Mich. (CPS) — An argument between an Olivet College student and her boyfriend deteriorated into a 70-person racial brawl April 2.

Police said the woman locked herself in her dorm room after she and her boyfriend had an argument. The boyfriend started to pound on the door with two friends, who are black.

Police said the woman telephoned a nearby fraternity house for help. The fraternity members went to the dorm, where a crowd had started to gather. Police said some of the whites in the crowd began to harass two black men, described by police as "innocent bystanders," and a fight ensued.

Police estimated that about 25 black students came to the defense of the two black men and fought with about 40 white students.

Two people suffered minor injuries and one window was broken in the scuffle. Immediately following the brawl, school officials imposed a curfew that was lifted the next day.

As a result of the fight, black students at Olivet have asked school officials to look into racial problems at the private college.

UNLV Has A New Basketball Coach

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (CPS) — Rollie Massimino, head coach of the Villanova men's basketball program for the past 19 years, will replace Coach Jerry Tarkanian at the University of Nevada at Las Vegas.

Massimino said he agreed to take the job after UNLV President Robert Maxson and athletic director Jim Weaver visited his home for dinner on March 30 and refused to leave unless he took the job.

In recent months, Weaver had been in constant contact with Massimino for suggestions about a possible replacement for Tarkanian.

"The decision was obviously not an easy one for me," Massimino said at a news conference. "But now that my tenure at Villanova is over, I'm excited to be a part of this great institution."

Students Protest Selection Committee

OAKLAND, Calif. (CPS) — Students at Mills College staged a sit-in April 2 to protest the school's hiring of a new provost by an all-white selection committee.

The students occupied the president's office for five hours, demanding a new search committee with some minority faculty members.

However, the school's president says she will not reopen the search to find someone else to fill the position.

In a prepared statement, President Janet Holmgren said, "I believe the search was conducted thoroughly and fairly... I do not intend to reopen the search." The students left peacefully, but vowed to continue their fight.

Faith Gabelnick was appointed by the committee as the school's new provost and dean of faculty. Gabelnick was a dean at Western Michigan University before landing the job at Mills, a private women's college in Northern California.

Students who participated in the sit-in say they won't rule out a boycott over the controversy.

In 1990, the students staged a two week strike to protest the schools' trustees' decision to begin admitting men into the school's undergraduate program.

Two months ago, signs began appearing on campus asking the college community to think about racism.

Sexual Harassment Charges Filed

LOS ANGELES (CPS) — A sexual harassment complaint was filed against the women's soccer coach at Occidental College, but the school will not investigate the allegations because the coach was dismissed the following day.

The complaint was filed by sophomore Lindsey Collins, who alleged that Coach Cherief Zein used vulgar language. Zein was fired the day after the complaint was filed.

Lynn Mehl, director of athletics at the school says Zein was not fired because of the sexual harassment allegations, but for "a whole host of reasons."

"Mr. Zein had a contract that expired with us, but we have no plans to renew it," said Floyd Lawrence, director of personnel at Occidental.

Zein, who has maintained his innocence, told the Occidental, the campus newspaper, that Mehl fired him, citing several NCAA violations arising from a soccer camp in Costa Rica that he owns.

Founders Die In Murder-Suicide

RUTHERFORD, N.J. (CPS) — Distraught over failing health, the founder of Farleigh-Dickinson University shot his wife to death, then killed himself in their home March 29, authorities said.

Peter Sammartino, 88, and his wife Sylvia, 88, founded Farleigh Dickson University 50 years ago. The school was celebrating its golden anniversary this academic year.

Sylvia Sammartino had Alzheimer's disease, and Sammartino recently had a kidney removed. Authorities say he was disturbed over their health problems and told friends that he might die soon.

Sammartino was president of the university for 25 years.

Divinity School Hosts Condom Art

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (CPS) — The condom has been elevated to the status of art by the Harvard Divinity School.

In an unusual art exhibit, titled "Sacred Condoms," divinity school students viewed condoms covered with beads, fur, yarn, leather, and feathers.

There were condoms filled with honey. There was even one with a tiny baby shoe in it.

Karen Norberg, the artist who created the body of condom works, is a psychiatrist and director of child psychiatry consultation at Boston City Hospital.

"The idea is to move away from the embarrassed, secretive, forbidden kind of association to making (condoms) acceptable," she told the Associated Press.

However, the exhibit was open only 90 minutes a day for two weeks at a time when most students at the school were on vacation.

A divinity school spokesman said the exhibit was not publicized and was used in teaching students at the non-denominational school how to counsel people about sexuality.

Betting Pool Investigated

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (CPS) — Authorities have closed a state probe into an NCAA basketball tournament betting pool in which University of North Carolina staff members wagered $61.

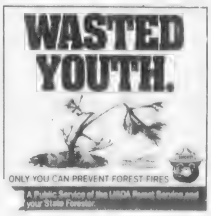
Forty-two staff members placed bets in the pool, averaging a little more than $1 each.

No arrests were made, and no action was taken, according to school officials who said they were "surprised" that the State Bureau of Investigation launched the investigation.

"It was an office pool, just like so many others — no one was making money," said Mary Ann Epstein, director of public information.

Vice Chancellor Larry Wilson said the betting wasn't done on state time.

"We've been trying to get on page one for years, but not this way," Epstein said.



Sports pools are not prohibited by state law, but they fall under the general statute banning gambling, which is a misdemeanor that carries a maximum penalty of two years in jail.

Coach Resigns Amid Investigation

EDWARDSVILLE, Ill. (CPS) — The coach of the men's basketball team at Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville resigned April 2 in the midst of an investigation into his alleged mishandling of player meal money.

Larry Graham, who will officially step down on June 30, cited "personal reasons" for his decision, according to a school statement.

The athletic department began investigating Graham and how he handled meal money intended for his players several months ago. Now, the university's auditors are handling the case.

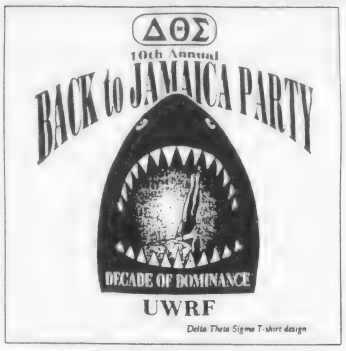
7,000 Letters Means New Zip For LC

By CHRISTY MOTTLEY
Staff Reporter

"Don't forget to write. Here's my address: Jane Doe, P. O. Box 123, Longwood College, Farmville, VA 23901."

Everyone likes to get mail. It's depressing to walk to the mailbox, open it to discover that it is empty. What makes it worse is when your best friend opens hers and finds four letters! As you said those last goodbyes to family and friends as you headed for Longwood, you most likely gave out your address, in hopes of receiving mail at least once a semester.

Recently, there's been an address change for students receiving mail on Longwood's campus.



According to Chuck Allen, Postmaster of the Farmville Post Office, "On an average there are approximately 7,000 pieces of mail that are forwarded from our office to Longwood each day. That's approximately two pieces per student."

At the beginning of 1991, Allen spoke with Longwood's Postmaster, Allen Franklin. Together they worked on obtaining a special zip code for Longwood College. The first step necessary was a letter of request. A letter was sent to Allen requesting a zip code solely for the school. He then proceeded to contact the proper authorities in Richmond, the state postal headquarters, to begin the process.

Approximately nine months later, based on the volume of mail and the number of people, Longwood College was issued the zip code 23909.

"This new zip code cuts down on additional handling by employees in the Farmville Post Office," stated Allen. "All our mail comes pre-sorted from Richmond. With Longwood having their own zip code, we don't have to separate town mail from Longwood mail. We can ship mail directly to Longwood enabling mail to get there a little quicker."

Students need to make sure the new zip code is placed on all mail. When giving out your address, remember 23909. If you don't, what mail you do get may take a little longer to get to you.

Delta Theta Sigma T-shirt design

Fraternity Catches Grief For T-Shirt Logo

By CHAD LINDSAY
The Student Voice

RIVER FALLS, Wis. (CPS) — The student senate at the University of Wisconsin-River Falls has approved a resolution suggesting that a fraternity apologize for designing and printing T-shirts that students have condemned as demeaning to women.

The Student Senate passed a resolution in late February that asked the Delta Theta Sigma fraternity chapter to be aware of the negative implications of the design and that the fraternity members reconsider printing anything similar in the future.

The Interfraternity Council also approved a motion suggesting that the Delta Theta Sigma members comply with the student senate resolution.

The T-shirts, which were sold for the fraternity's "Back to Jamaica" party, depicted a woman in a shark's mouth with the words "Decade of Dominance" below it.

Tom Goodenough, president of the fraternity, has declined to discuss the issue.

Jim Chaussee, president of the Interfraternity Council, said there was concern about protecting the Greek image, but he noted that the Delta Thetas had not violated any rules.

"DTS has not broken any laws. At worst, they have used bad judgment," he said.

Some students have begun collecting petition signatures protesting the T-shirts.

"Hopefully the petition will create a greater awareness among men and women on campus that this was sexist and degrading and dehumanizing," said Jeannette Barisonzi, one of the protesters and head of the Women's Student Association.

Betty Bergland, a professor who teaches a class on Women and History, said students discussed the T-shirt during a recent meeting and suggested various courses of action.

"They are justifiably outraged and have gone about this in a intelligent and thoughtful way," she said.

Other students said the issue was not that important.

"I think people are blowing this way out of proportion," said student John Kiecker. "I don't think the words are meant to go with the picture. The words relate to the fact that it was their 10th annual party."

Earnest Gives Players A Success

By ROSE ANN PITZL
Staff Reporter

The Longwood Players, performed The Importance of Being Earnest last week.

Although the play was not as well attended as comedies have been in the past, it was a success. The lower attendance can not be attributed to any lack of talent by the cast, who brought Wilden's comedy to life with their impressive mastery of the dialect and grasp of the Victorian time period.

The action in the three-act play took place in three staged locations. Act one in Algenon flat. Act two in the Manner garden, and Act three in the Manner House conservatory.

This put a great demand on the set designers to create three striking sets, which they accomplished. The set design was spectacular. Due to the scenery change between acts and the length of the play, a 10-minute intermission followed each act.

The members of the cast portrayed Wilde's upperclass in an impressive manner, and captured the essence of the period in their nuances. It was obvious that they not only understood, but appreciated the subtle humor in Wilde's work, and put great effort into the delivery to insure that the audience did as well. Some problems with line delivery occurred in the early performances, but Saturday's performance went without a hitch.

The Importance of Being Earnest is a comedy that centers around the theme of double identity and deception, a satire of Victorian manners, and mortality. The farce of the play surrounds the frantic activity of two men that fall in love with women who know them under the false name Earnest.

David Nelson Richards is Algenon Moncrieff, an upperclass bachelor who, bored with his aristocrat life, sets up a separate identity for himself in the county. Rick Codding is John Worthing, who Alegenon discovers is playing the same game, "bunburning" as he calls it, under the alias Earnest.

John falls in love with Algenon's niece Gwendolyn, played by Kate Dunnet, but soon realizes that before he can marry her he must somehow merge his two identities and tell her that his name is not Earnest. This becomes increasingly difficult when she tells him that his name is the main attraction.

Algenon places himself in the same boat when he, as an attempt to make both of their lives more interesting, goes to John's place in the country as John's fictitious brother Earnest. It is here that he falls for John's ward, Cecily, who, like Gwendolyn falls in love not with the man, but with the name Earnest.

The obstacles that the couples must face are the lies between them and two very strong characters. Gwendolyn's mother, performed by faculty member Pam Arkin, and Cecily's governess, Miss Prism, performed by Ann Heim, also hamper the romantic efforts of the two gentlemen.

Longwood staff member, Hal Sherman, was convincing as Rev. Canon Chasuble, the devout village clergyman who in the course of the play is asked by both men that he christen them under the name Earnest.

Daniel Ellis had the double role as both Lane, manservant to John Worthing, and Merriman, butler to Algenon, and Jonathan Church appeared as the footman.

Satire can be difficult to execute effectively, especially when it is of this subtle nature. The cast did an incredible job and did the script, and all of its rapid one liners, justice.

The last theatrical performance of the semester will take place on April 25, 27 and 28. It will consist of two Japanese productions — The Nightingale, and A Thousand Cranes. These productions will take place at different times during these dates, in both the morning and evening hours.

You Are Now Entering... The Nightmare Cafe

By AMY REYNOLDS

(CPS) – You're dead and you're a short-order cook.

You're stuck somewhere between life and what lies beyond, a beautiful waitress (also dead) working by your side, a television that peers into the past at your disposal.

Welcome to the "Nightmare Cafe," where visitors' fears and wishes come true, whether they'd like them to or not.

It's too complicated to explain this place is full – you simply have to watch the series to understand.

"I would call it a 'Twilight Zone' with a sense of humor," says star Jack Coleman, who plays the short-order cook. "The cafe is its own character, it's a very magical place ... Some people are attracted to the show because they think it's horror, but when they watch, they see it's really its own creation."

With a sense of humor.

The show was created by Wes Craven, known mostly for big-screen horror flicks like "the People Under the Stairs" and the "Nightmare on Elm Street" films.

Craven, Coleman, Robert Englund (Freddy Krueger from the "Nightmare on Elm Street" films) as narrator, and actress Lindsay Frost as the waitress, have all received the critics' approval for the show, but face a tough fight out of a Friday time slot. The show airs on NBC at 10 p.m.

"Right now we don't know what's going to happen because we're in such a tough time slot," Coleman says. "The numbers aren't high, but the demographics are excellent."

Demographics are the makeup of the show's audience, whose members are primarily between the ages of 18-44. The college audience is one group the show is targeting because of the show's sophisticated nature.

"We're getting (the college) audience now, but that's also the night when a lot of that audience would be out," Coleman says.

Still, he has confidence that the show will thrive once more people discover it. The mystery surrounding the show is part of what attracted Coleman to his role.

"This (script) just jumped out at me. It was the most interesting and most fun of all the ones I had read," he says. "I wasn't sure if I was what they were looking for originally. They wanted someone more macho, with a darker side."

But, the actor known perhaps best for his portrayal as Dynasty's Steven Carrington, landed the role anyway, and he is hopeful about the series' future.

In the meantime, Coleman is continuing his work with a theater company in Los Angeles called the Los Angeles Classic Theater Works where he just completed a play called "Say Zebra," about the political situation in South Africa.

Executive Visits LC

William G. Reynolds Jr., a vice president with Reynolds Metals Company in Richmond, visited Longwood recently as an executive-in-residence for the School of Business and Economics.

Reynolds, vice president for Government Relations and Public Affairs, gave a lecture March 31 to more than 200 business students, faculty and local business leaders on the topic, "Is the U. S. Recession Over?", with emphasis on the aluminum industry. The next day, he discussed various real world issues with students in economics and marketing classes.

The day after leaving Longwood, Reynolds departed for a two-week tour of Russia during which he was to visit the world's largest aluminum smelting plant in Siberia. Reynolds Metals Company executives are exploring possible ventures at that plant involving Italians and Russians, he said.

"Longwood was very fortunate to have Mr. Reynolds participate in the Executive-in-Residence program," said Dr. Berkwood M. Farmer, dean of the School of Business and Economics. "Reynolds Metals is the leader in the aluminum business both nationally and internationally, and Mr. Reynolds is known nationally for his work in federal and state governmental relations."

The Executive-in-Residence Program provides an educational enrichment experience for business students through their interaction with top-level corporate executives from throughout Virginia.

"The program provides a mechanism for the direct exchange of ideas and philosophy between the corporate boardroom and the more theoretical classroom," Dr. Farmer said. "It also serves as a forum whereby community business, educational and government leaders and the Business School faculty can get to know one another better. This is important since Longwood is an active participant in the Southside Virginia economic community."

There were four categories that the candidates were judged. The first category was an application listing campus activities and GPA. The last three categories were judged on Friday night.

The "Jean" category was first, and the men were judged on their physique. The "Costume" category proceeded and the men were judged on their originality and appearance. Last was the interview. Each candidate chose a question, and they were judged on their overall response.

The following are the candidates and the sororities the men represented:

The Court Case

That's why many fear Roe v. Wade will eventually be reversed.

Most activists don't expect the Pennsylvania case to overturn Roe v. Wade because of the upcoming election. But, Massie and others note that the requirements the court is considering in the case are a major departure from the abortion cases heard in the past few years, the most noted (Rust v. Sullivan) dealing with federally funded family planning centers and the type of information they can give women about abortion.

The major departures in the Pennsylvania case deal with the information a doctor must give patients and the 24-hour waiting period.

"There are two parts to the information requirement," Massie explains. "First, either a doctor or referring physician must tell the woman of the nature of the procedure, the risk of having an abortion, the medical risk of carrying the child to term and the gestation period of the fetus.

"Also, someone must tell the woman that the Pennsylvania Department of Health has pamphlets about the unborn child and its development. They must also tell the woman her other options, including the fact that the father could be held liable for financial assistance or that the woman could be eligible for prenatal care through the state.

"Finally, they must certify in writing that all this information has been given to the woman," Massie says.

According to Roe v. Wade, a state cannot regulate those things that the Pennsylvania law has spelled out.

"It's another assault on Roe v. Wade, like Webster (v. Reproductive Health Services), where the states are trying to pass more restrictive legislation," Massie says. "The (court's) decisions of the past few years haven't been major departures from the past rulings, but they've tended in the direction of showing greater tolerance for regulations."

In the 1989 Webster case out of Missouri, the court granted states wider latitude to regulate abortions.

"If the Pennsylvania case is upheld, we will see these inroads develop," Massie says. "The court could uphold all of the (Pennsylvania requirements) and still uphold Roe v. Wade."

But, after the Pennsylvania case, the battle against Roe v. Wade could become increasingly stronger. Louisiana and Utah both have major anti-abortion laws headed toward the Supreme Court that basically provide a direct challenge to the rights guaranteed in Roe v. Wade.

Pro-life activists are pushing to have the 1973 case overturned and then will focus on convincing individual state legislators to limit abortion.

Pro-choice activists say they don't want a state-by-state fight if Roe v. Wade is overturned. Rather, they are lobbying Congress for passage of the Freedom of Choice Act, federal legislation that would set a national standard for abortion protection based on the principles established by Roe v. Wade.

If re-elected, President Bush has said he will veto the bill if it makes it to his desk; activists on both sides say they aren't sure whether or not enough congressional members support the measure to override Bush's veto.

Farmville Joins Fitness Craze

By CASSANDRA YELLIS
Staff Reporter

In a world gone mad with losing weight and being in shape, Farmville officially joined the craze with the opening of Ultimate Fitness on March 7.

Ultimate Fitness started with three individuals who noticed that Farmville had no facilities for people to work out and get into shape besides those located on the campuses of Longwood and Hampden-Sydney. The threesome, who introduced Ultimate Fitness to Farmville included, Mark Drinkard, Hunter and Lewis Martin, all from Appomattox. They are not new to the fitness field however, Lewis Martin owns another gym in Appomattox.

Drinkard, who graduated from James Madison University in 1987, owns a convenience store in Appomattox and wanted a change. He remembers having to go off campus to work out while he was in college and worrying about open recreational hours which proved to be an inconvenience.

Ultimate Fitness is for the town of Farmville as well as the students. Drinkard stressed "We offer facilities to students they have not had, and an atmosphere more conducent to working out..." Students may purchase memberships by the month, semester, or school year at affordable prices.

Some of the equipment featured includes some Nautilus, but mostly Pro-Line which is manufactured in Texas. Ranging from a full line of free weights, dumbells, barbells, incline and flat benches, squat racks, Life fitness bikes, stair steppers and treadmills that are all computerized, there are machines for every body part. In addition to the equipment, there are shower and locker rooms facilities, a pro shop and supplements for those who wish to train more heavily.

One real advantage is that there are trainers available to help people with the equipment and develop programs for their own personal work out, which is very useful if you are a beginner. The machines are also set up for circuit training, where the upper body is worked out and then the lower body. This way one part of the body can rest while the other part is being used.

Along with a full line of weights and machines, Ultimate Fitness offers aerobic classes at many times during the day, especially for those who have a hectic schedule. There are six aerobic instructors, several of whom taught aerobics classes at Longwood.

The turnout so far at Ultimate Fitness has been good, according to Drinkard. They are open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. during the week, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday, and 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. on Sunday. Drinkard stated that Ultimate Fitness will begin opening at 6 a.m. on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

In 1988 Dr. Apperson conducted a study at Longwood concerning sexual assault. Three hundred and fourteen students, randomly selected, were surveyed on the issue of sexual assault. The results proved interesting. At some point in their lives:

- 59.5 percent of women and 14.4 percent of men have been sexually assaulted by a dating partner consisting being touched, held, or kissed against their will.
- 74.6 percent of men and 61.1 percent of women disagree with the statement that a woman who is drunk and forced into having sex is at fault.
- 13.7 percent of women have been physically forced by a dating partner to have sexual intercourse.

Overall, both men and women feel pressure to be sexually active, but more women feel comfortable saying no to sex than do men.

Men and women have certainly become more sensitized to the issue of sexual assault and harassment with the recent highly publicized and televised trials of Anita Hill/Clarence Thomas and Patricia Bowman/William Kennedy Smith. No longer is sexual assault a topic that should be kept a secret; instead people are more aware of what it is, when it happens, and how to stop it.

In another survey prepared by the Longwood Office of Student Affairs in 1990, 3,751 students from eight colleges in Virginia (843 from Longwood) completed surveys conveying their ideas about substance abuse.

- 60 percent of the students had regretted their behavior after using alcohol.
- 40 percent had had unwanted sex after using alcohol.

The Longwood results indicated a slightly higher proportion of regular drinkers than the overall Virginia results.

The survey also indicated that the most common drug used among those surveyed is marijuana, with 45 percent of students reporting using it.

The Governor's Task Force on Sexual Abuse and Assault will provide a solid foundation that will aid in improving these problems at Longwood. In the areas of Education, Treatment, and Enforcement, Longwood is expected to curtail sexual and substance abuse on campus, and hopefully there will be a noticeable improvement in the near future. The first step is for students, faculty and staff to become cognizant of these problems so that they can work together for a solution.

The Student Development Office is at it again. Spring break has come and gone, and they have pumped out yet another round of surveys.

Approximately 900 students returned to campus to find that they were among the randomly chosen few to receive a golden packet in the mailbox which included not one but three surveys, this time. We are all assured that each and every one is of the ut most importance.

Two of the instruments relate to Longwood's ongoing data collection regarding the change and development of our students, but the third is something different entirely.

A new staff member in the Student Development Office, Onie McKenzie, has designed a student opinion piece that allows us to evaluate the services, offices, and programs that effect our daily lives. She swears they need our evaluation of these programs and services in hopes of making this place the best that it can be. Makes sense, I guess...

So, if you are one of the lucky ones, be a pal and get those surveys back to the Student Development Office.

Saunders, Risko Share Player Of The Week

JENNIFER RISKO

Sophomore tennis players Melanie Saunders and Jennifer Risko, both 6-0 in singles for Lady Lancer netters this spring, have been named co-Longwood College Players of the Week for the period April 5-12. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

Saunders, who plays No. 2 and Risko, who has played No. 5 for most of the season, both won two singles matches last week as Longwood beat Virginia Wesleyan Thursday 7-2 and Meredith Friday 8-1. The Lady Lancers evened their record at 3-3 with the victories.

"Saunders and Risko have been consistent in their play the whole year," said coach Angie Coppedge. "They have continued to win this spring even though they've moved up a notch on the singles ladder."

Saunders and Risko also teamed up for a doubles victory last week, winning at No. 2 couples against Meredith.

A graduate of Halifax County high School, Saunders was also 6-0 in the fall, giving her a combined mark of 12-0 for the year. Coach Coppedge credits Melanie with being a determined competitor who refuses to quit. She has won several three-set matches in her career.

Risko, now 12-1 for the year, has a 23-4 record over two seasons. She played the No. 6 position in 1990-91 and some last fall. Coach Coppedge says she wears down her opponents with tremendous consistency. She graduated form Heidelberg High School in West Germany.

Lancers Win 11 Straight; Record Now 25-7

Longwood's surging baseball team won seven games in a five-day stretch last week, increasing its current win streak to 11 and improving its season record to 25-7, heading into a doubleheader against nationally ranked South Carolina Spartanburg Wednesday afternoon in Crewe at 1.

Spartanburg, ranked 19th at 14-10 a week ago, proved to be a tough foe for the Lancers March 24 in South Carolina when the Rifles took the opener 3-0 and Longwood the nightcap 2-1 Longwood was ranked 22nd last week.

Thursday the Lancers will visit Randolph-Macon for a single game at 3 and next Monday they'll pay a return visit to Worthington Field to face Division I Liberty for the second time.

Outscoring the opposition 98-26 last week for an average score of 14-3.7, Longwood beat Division I's North Carolina A&T (16-5, 12-2) and Maryland Eastern Shore (9-2, 20-8) Saturday and Sunday. Friday the Lancers beat homestanding Virginia State 6-2 and last Wednesday, Longwood took care of St. Paul's 15-1 and 20-6.

Longwood All-American Mike Tucker finished off the week the way he began it with a pair of homers as the Lancers beat UMES twice Sunday in games played in Lynchburg. Tucker had a pair of two-run homers for a record total of 18 for the season and 41 for his career. Tucker held the old season mark of 15, while Jeff Mayone (1984-87) had the career record at 39.

Counting the twin bill against St. Paul's, Tucker had 19 RBIs for the week. He has 55 for the season. Freshman Brian Bassett ended Sunday with three doubles in three trips to the plate. He got two doubles and two RBI in the opener. Kyle Weaver, now 5-3, gave up just two hits and no runs in five innings to pick up the win.

In the second game, which was delayed briefly by rain, John Hutzler went 4-5 with three RBIs and a double, Scott Abell hit his 10th homer and drove in three runs, Tucker went 3-4 with a double and a triple, and Shawn Jones collected his eighth homer and a triple in two trips. Benefitting from 13 walks altogether, the Lancers moved ahead 8-0 in the first inning, a frame which featured six consecutive Lancer hits.

Wyatt Flippen allowed just one hit and two earned runs in four innings while moving his record to 3-0.

Bowman Slam Keys Sweep of Aggies

Junior Todd Bowman hit a grand slam homer and collected six RBIs to key an opening 16-5 Lancer win Saturday over North Carolina A&T, while Tucker and Jeff Toms homered for Longwood in the 12-2 victory in the nightcap. Both games were stopped after five innings on the 10-run rule.

Bowman added a two-run double, Terry Taylor hit his sixth homer and Chris Tyson drove in four runs with a double and a single to make a winner out of pitcher Bill Martz. Martz (2-1) gave up eight hits and five runs.

Freshman pitcher Bart van Zoest tossed a four-hitter in the second game while running his record to 4-0. Tucker (3-3) and freshman Jeff Toms homered for Longwood while Chris Porter also had three hits and three RBIs. It was Tom's sixth homer.

Weaver Goes the Distance In Win at Virginia State

In perhaps the top outing of his career, sophomore Wayne Weaver limited host Virginia State to seven hits and two runs over nine innings, keying Longwood's 6-2 win Friday. Weaver (3-) walked two, struck out three, and allowed just one earned run.

Tyson (2-4, RBI) and Taylor (2-3,RBI) were the top Lancer hitters. Porter also had a clutch hit, an RBI and scored all the way from first on a single by Taylor in the fourth, putting Longwood up 3-1. The Lancers stole six bases in seven attempts.

Lancers Rip St. Paul's 15-1, 20-6

Longwood laid waste to visiting St. Paul's Wednesday at Prince Edward County High School as Tucker drove in 10 runs to pace a 15-1, 20-6 sweep of the Division II, CIAA member Tigers.

Longwood scored 12 runs in the first inning of the nightcap and Tucker drove in seven. He hit a grand slam homer to put the Lancers up 4-2. Later in the same inning Tucker hit another blast out of the park with two men on board.

Perhaps the longest homer of the day was hit by Toms, also in the first inning. Also homering for Longwood were Tyson (1) and Abell with three-run shots in the first game. Abell had a total of six RBIs for the day with five coming in the first game. Hutzler went 3-3 in the second game with a double and two RBI.

Gaining the mound wins for Longwood were freshmen Mark Simon in the first game and John Daniel in the second. A lefthander, Simon (2-0) tossed a three-hitter and struck out six. Daniel (1-0) allowed eight hits.

Reflections Of A Road Trip

By CHRISTOPHER MULLINS
Staff Writer

Christopher Mullins is a senior pitcher for the Lancers. The following article is a journal account of a recent baseball team trip. It will be published over several issues.

Friday, Feb. 28

9:00 a.m. – Oooh! I lay in bed trying to answer the wakeup call, but I can't! I'm paralyzed? No! I'm sore! 101 pitches the previous night made me pay this morning.

9:15 a.m. –I take a long, long hot-shower. I even use the Water-Pik. That damn thing is a gimmick. It doesn't massage me, just shoots three fat ropes of water at Fire Department speed into your back. After I catch my breath after having the crap beat out of me in the shower, Todd, Mark, and I go to eat at Shoney's.

11:00 a.m. – We leave for the ballpark. Today we play Morris College in a doubleheader.

6:00 p.m. – Being the superior team, we slaughter rule them twice. Pretty much a typical Lancer beating of an opponent, except for one thing. Fellow pitcher Wayne Weaver threw a no-hitter. A major feat any time you can accomplish, today put Wayne in the books forever.

We arrive back at the hotel.

7:00 p.m. – Mark, Todd, and I went to the mall on Coach's shuttle. We wanted to find a new restaurant, but ended up at Pizza Hut. We talked and ate for a long while, then went back through the mall to find the arcade. After you play a couple of games, we can start giving oral report cards on players, teams, umpires, etc. I guess it's a way to pass the time.

9:00 p.m. – We arrive back at the hotel and pack because we are leaving Florence for Columbia in the morning.

10:00 p.m. – A friendly game of cards is being played, for fun, not money of course. Yeah, for fun.

Midnight – Lights out.

Saturday, Feb. 29

10:30 a.m. –We ship out of Florence on time. As I am going through my stuff to make sure that I have everything, I find $17 in my wallet that wasn't there before. Hmmm? I wonder where that came from?

11:30 a.m. – We stop at Darlington Raceway in Darlington, South Carolina. It was pretty cool because I've never seen a super-speedway, nor any speedway, before. Todd particularly enjoyed it because he has two stepbrothers and race professionally. After pictures, etc. we left.

12:45 p.m. – We arrive in Columbia, and check into the Columbia Northeast Hotel. For tonight, Mark Simon and Todd Bowman and I must share a room. Hmmm. Let's see. I'm a senior. Todd's a junior, and Mark's a freshman. I wonder which two will get their own beds and who will get the cot?

2:30 p.m. – We arrive at the ballpark and do the same old, same old. My soreness is almost gone, considering I may have to pitch tomorrow. Bill Martz and Mark Simon pitch today against Benedict College.

9:00 p.m. – We won both games and are on our way back to the hotel. Bill pitched well and Mark tied a school record for most strikeouts in a game. I just tried to encourage everyone during the games, and got in a couple innings as the play-by-play man. When he is not pitching, Bart videotapes our games, a freshman responsibility. I wandered over and just started commenting on the mike, and the next thing you know, we were in the fifth inning. It kept me in the game, much like keeping the scorebook, or charting pitches, etc.

10:30 p.m. – After eating at some pitiful restaurant called Waffle House, which should be called Awful House, we managed to keep our food down and go to the club in the Hotel. Myself, Todd, Wyatt Flippen, Bart, and Brian Bassett went down there to shoot pool. It was pretty fun, except for some little weasel running around making sure we paid $1 every time we played. What a job, begging for money.

12:30 a.m. – Todd and I fell asleep, while Mark stayed downstairs in his parents' room.

Lady Lancer Softball Squad Wins 3-4

By GREG PROUTY

Longwood's softball team played four games over the weekend, splitting with Virginia Wesleyan Saturday at home, winning 7-6 and losing 6-2, before sweeping a doubleheader on the road Sunday against James Madison's club team by scores of 5-1 and 21-3.

At JMU, coach Loretta Coughlin's squad scored four runs in the second inning of the opener in taking a 5-1 decision. Freshman Lorri Payne slammed a two-run homer, while sophomore Ana Litton and freshmen Becky Condrey and Mari Willen each contributed two hits apiece to pace the victory. Sophomore Andrea Wrenn picked up the mound decision and is now 4-5 on the season.

In the nightcap, the lady Lancers scored in every inning of the five-inning blowout. LC got five in the first, three in the second, two in the third, six in the fourth, and five in the fifth. Litton and senior Laura Marks each hit two-run homers, with senior Cassie Mullenix and Payne each adding three hits to the attack.

Senior Chris Gronke scored five runs, going 2-2 with three walks. Marks added four runs, while Litton and Payne each scored three runs. Junior Kathy Brown took the pitching win and is now 6-5 this spring.

Against VW, the Lady Lancers scored four runs in the bottom of the seventh inning of the opener to take an exciting 7-6 victory before dropping the nightcap 6-2.

In the first game win, Longwood trailed 6-3 heading into its last at bat. Payne led off by reaching first on a close play in which the shortstop's throw pulled the first baseman's foot off the bag. Following an out, Payne stole second and moved to third on Willen's single. Payne then scored on a passed ball with Willen moving to third. Gronke's single scored Willen to close the score to within 6-5.

Marks and Mullenix then singled to load the bases as pinch-runner Ginny Henry moved to third. A passed ball scored Henry with the tying run and following another out, Condrey singled to score Marks with the game-winner. Brown picked up the pitching win in relief.

In the second game, Longwood allowed all six runs in the first inning and never recovered to lose 6-2. The Lady Lancers managed single runs in the fourth and sixth innings. Gronke singled and scored on a double by Marks in the fourth, and Litton singled and scored on an error in the sixth. Brown suffered the mound loss.

Longwood travels to Mary Washington Wednesday for a doubleheader at 2 o'clock, then closes the season Friday at Bridgewater with a doubledip beginning at 3.

Lady Golfers Sixth In UNCW Tournament

Swinging back in to action after a month layoff, Longwood's women golfers finished sixth out of nine teams at the 11th Azalea/Seahawk Invitational which was hosted by UNC Wilmington Friday through Sunday at Topsail Greens Country Club in Hempstead, N.C.

Longwood shot 332-329-330 for a three-round total of 991, while Kansas traveled a long way to come up with the tourney title, tying a tournament record with a 316-307-297-920. Jayhawk standout Holly Reynolds shot 69-77-74-220 to take the individual crown.

Leading the way for Longwood was freshman Charlaine Coetzee with an 81-84-76-241. Junior Anna Radford was next at 85-79-83-247. Also playing for the Lady Lancers were seniors Sherry Evans, 79-82-88-249 and Ami Schonauer 87-84-83-254, plus freshman Michelle Zi-ats, 88-92-94-274.

Longwood will turn its attention to getting ready for the National Golf Coaches Association Division II Championship May 4-6 in Fayetteville, N.C. After finishing second last season behind Rollins, the Lady Lancers will be out to reclaim the title they won in 1987, 1988 and 1990.

Azalea/Seaahawk Team Scores: Kansas 920, UNC Wilmington 955, Methodist 963, James Madison 970, Alabama-Birmingham 986, Longwood 991, Western Kentucky 998, UNC Greensboro 1022, Appalachian State 1053.

General Assembly Awards Jordan Commendation

By LINDA M. NYGAARD
Staff Reporter

Dr. James William Jordan, Professor of Sociology and Anthropology at Longwood College, was recently commended by the Virginia General Assembly in honor of his outstanding scholarship and devotion in the field of archeology. By creating and directing the Archeology Field School at Longwood, Professor Jordan has not only provided an extraordinary service to hundreds of students, but has made lasting contributions to the archaeological field.

Prior to joining the Longwood College faculty, Jordan began his professional preparation at Indiana State College in Pennsylvania, where he graduated in 1964. He then went on to graduate school at the University of Connecticut and received a masters degree in Sociology.

According to Professor Jordan, it was at the University of Connecticut that he encountered a group of students who perhaps changed the professional direction of his career. Jordan recalls that as he observed these students, he noticed that even though they were all covered with dirt and grime, there was noticeable excitement in their eyes and self-satisfaction on their faces.

Upon further inquiry, Jordan discovered that the students were archeology students at the University who were engaged in excavational work. According to Jordan, it was at this point that he knew, "That is what I want to do!" He therefore pursued an additional masters degree at the University of Connecticut in Anthropology, which he received in 1969.

Following his years in graduate work, Jordan taught at Georgia Southern College for a period of three years. He then attended the University of Georgia, where he received his doctorate in 1976.

Jordan's distinguished work at Longwood began in 1978, when he was offered a position in the sociology department teaching various sociology and anthropology classes. The increasing popularity of his archaeological classes made it quickly evident that a growing number of Longwood students were strongly interested in the field.

As a professional with extremely high archaeological ambitions, Jordan soon originated weekend field experiences for his classes. The introduction of such ventures enabled students to discover first-hand what they had previously been able to merely read about from textbooks, or view on slides in the classroom setting. These weekend excavations eventually launched into an extensive summer program, which is currently preparing for its 13th season.

Since its founding at Longwood in April, 1980, the program in field archeology has attempted to achieve several goals under the direction of Jordan. The first of these has been the active teaching of students, both in classroom and field settings, the many techniques and perspectives involved in the archaeological field.

During the program's 12-year-history thus far, a total of 586 students have been members of the various crews of the Archeology Field School. Many of these students have been drawn to the Longwood program from other colleges in Virginia, as well as from colleges out-of-state.

The crews of Longwood's Summer Field School include students with a broad range of curriculum majors — from business administration, to elementary education, to students majoring in music. Jordan justifies this wide diversity by reflecting that, "Most everyone, at one time or another, has wanted to be an archaeologist...this (the Longwood Field School) provides them that chance."

The second primary mission of the program has been in conducting archaeological surveys and excavations in Virginia, in order to increase the existing understanding of this region's history. During the 1980-1991 period, the Longwood Field School has excavated many significant sites.

These prehistoric and historic sites include a 3,000 to 5,000-year-old Indian gathering and hunting camp in Cumberland County; the Locust Grove Plantation, home of the Revolutionary War hero, Peter Francisco; and Ingleside, an 18th century dwelling in Prince Edward County. Presently, the Archeology Field School has uncovered and preserved more than 14,500 prehistoric and historic artifacts.

The third notable goal that the Archaeological Field School has strived to accomplish focuses upon heightening local, regional, and state knowledge and interest in the field. Through varied mediums, the program reports their findings of frontline research in the hope of connecting the traditions of the past to the shaping of the present.

Dr. James W. Jordan directs an excavation at Liberia plantation in Manassas, Virginia during a past summer field school .

In striving to meet this goal as director of Longwood's Field School, Professor Jordan has produced a wealth of scholarly papers, technical reports, and publications. Additionally, Jordan has delivered numerous public lectures, workshops, and other programs. Many of these services have been directed to local educational and community-service organizations, such as presentations given to children at local schools.

For the 1992 Summer Field School, the crews of first and second sessions will excavate three different sites. The first site is a prehistoric Indian habitation site located on the Appomattox River. This site, known as the Morris Field Archaeological site, has already produced stone tools and pottery which have been dated to the period 2000 BC to 1700 AD.

The crews will dig at a second prehistoric site on the James River in Nelson County. This woodland site may be the location of the Monacan Town of Monahassanough first noted on Captain John Smith's map of 1608. Crews will live in tents on the banks of the James River and will link their archaeological work to the 1992 James River Batteau Festival.

The third site of excavation will be carried out at the Millbrook Archaeological Site, located in Buckingham County. At this site are the remains of a plantation which was built in 1809 and destroyed by fire in 1866. Oral tradition states that this plantation was designed and landscaped by President Thomas Jefferson as a wedding gift for his daughter, Maria. The Longwood Field Crews will be doing the first archaeological research at this site and will be testing the Jeffersonian connection.

When asked what he found to be the single most rewarding aspect of his archaeological work, Jordan responded by comparing his scientific research to a link in an archaeological chain. Through the field school experiences, the past is uncovered and relived, in front of the next generation, so that this history may hopefully be carried into the future.

Jordan went on to say that his greatest rewards stemmed from, "knowing that you are a part of passing on something more than just a page in a book, or more than just an artifact...but the passing on of the past...(in ways that) couldn't be learned in any other way." He explained that an archaeologist can be likened to a "teller of ancient myths of stories of the past. You are where they (prehistoric people) were years before, and you are the only reminder of them...to continue the past."

Jordan later shared an additional story that typified another of his greatest career satisfactions. This story dealt with one of Jordan's senior students in the anthropology department. This student, Brian Bates, had recently received an acceptance letter to the University of London's graduate program in archeology. Through the analogy of this example, Jordan expressed the satisfaction derived from being able to witness one of his own students have the opportunity to "go on to do bigger and better things."

In his concluding remarks, Jordan further reflected by stating that, "I can honestly say that, no, I have never had a dis appointing day."

Earth Club Strives For A More Environmentally Aware Campus

By LINDA M. NYGAARD
Staff Reporter

After the "landfill" event of Earth Week is over and the big pile of trash has been collected, things will be back to normal and students will be able to go back to following their day-to-day routines, right? Wrong.

If Earth Week at Longwood College accomplishes the goals it has set out for, then hopefully it will not be something that, students only think about once a year. According to Earth Club President Jennifer Wyatt, If Earth Day is to be successful, all students — not just Earth Club members — need to commit to investing a little time and energy to make a difference in the environment.

The Earth Club is already discussing potential plans for next semester. Although these plans are still in the working stages, there are current plans for a 2-year environmental program at Longwood College. The program, which would replace the "Opening Doors to World" project of 1991-1992, would feature various speakers and movies to promote environmental awareness.

Also for next semester there are plans for a new publication on campus. This will be an environmental newsletter published by Earth Club members, as well as other environmentally aware students.

The monthly newsletter will include various feature articles, creativity sections (for example — crossword puzzles, poetry, short stories, entertainment updates, political cartoons), a question and answer column, updates on the Earth Club's accomplishments and upcoming events, various polls and surveys, as well as, contact addresses.

Another goal of the Earth Club is the establishment of an office on campus. Such an office would provide a "community research area" so that students could have access to environmental information.

Additional goals range from getting rid of all disposable dishware from the dining hall, encouraging the use of Earth Mugs, attending more environmental conferences and conventions, and sponsoring more on-campus activities, such as monthly campus clean up days, environmental movies, and bands. There are also potential plans for the Earth Club to adopt a spot on campus to work on and "beautify." Although not definite, it is believed this spot will potentially be the area between Lancaster and North Cunningham.

However, since next semester's plans are still months away, there are practical tips that students can incorporate into their daily lives to begin helping the environment now. These tips emphasize the point that, according to Jennifer Wyatt, Environmental awareness is not just about recycling... it is about conservation. The following present a few of the things students can do to start helping the environment.

*Cut off tap water while brushing teeth.

*Cut down on use of napkins. (One per meal should be adequate!)

*Buy environmentally safe products. (For example, "Earth Rite" products can be found at Wal-Mart!)

*Creatively reuse disposable products.

*Incorporate more walking, carpooling, or use of the bus system.

*Cut off all electrical appliances when not in use (i.e., lights, TV, stereo).

*Keep plants in your dorm room or apartment, particularly spider plants. These plants actually absorb toxins from the air.

*Avoid nonstick cooking materials. Most of these surfaces will emit toxic fumes into the air at certain temperatures.

If students are weary of purchasing environmentally safe products, they may want to think again. According to Wyatt, toothpaste contains formaldehyde, which is a toxic chemical known for causing respiratory problems. Wyatt additionally said that deodorant contains aluminum, which has been linked to Alzheimer's Disease in current research findings.

For anyone interested in finding out additional information or receiving a product catalog of naturally made products, there are many that are currently available. For example, Natural World is a company which manufactures various personal care and home products that are made completely out of natural ingredients. According to Wyatt, "Although these products may be more expensive, they are beneficial in the long run because they will save you money in doctor bills to cure health problems caused by the use of chemical products."

In conclusion, Wyatts goal for the future consists of creating bridges and diminishing the barriers that keep individuals from getting environmentally involved. Wyatt went on to stress that, After all, it is not just the responsibility of Earth Club members, but of all!

Energy Conservation Program Adopted

By DINA M. DAWSON
Staff Reporter

It's a cold winter morning, and students rush to their classes. From out of the ground, steam arises, escaping through the black manhole covers decorating the sidewalks.

According to Mr. Richard Hurley, Vice President for Business Affairs, such leaks in Longwood's heating system account for an estimated one million dollars each year spent on electricity, water, and fuel. To drastically reduce that amount, Longwood hired a company out of Richmond, Honeywell Incorporated, to survey the college and offer solutions on how to reduce the amount spent each year.

Honeywell devised a plan and presented it to Longwood. This plan guarantees that the annual cost of the renovations needed in order to fix the problem will be made up by the savings in consumption, or Honeywell will pay the difference.

The renovations include steam system repairs, computerized air-conditioning heating systems, improved lighting, and a miniature boiler installed in the heating plant.

EDITORIAL

The end of the school year is finally here. It seems too soon for those of you who are counting on "just one more test before finals to bring my grade up," but it's a long-awaited event for most of us.

We, the editorial staff of the Rotunda, have greatly enjoyed the past year. We have had the opportunity to cover stories that dealt with SGA's triumphs and failures, student protests, civility programming, meningitis, and other issues of interest to the Longwood community.

As the year progressed, we strived to improve the writing, layout, and scope of the paper. We believe that we have, to a large degree, succeeded.

Through the contributions of a small, dedicated group of staff members and journalism students we were able to inform, entertain, and, we hope, provoke discussion among the students, faculty, staff and administrators of Longwood.

It was, however, extremely difficult to do. Few people realize the time and effort that goes into producing a newspaper.

The entire process begins with the allocation of beats and assignments.

A reporter researchers his or her article topic, or in the case of following a beat, monitors all activities in that area (i.e. student life, SGA, Greek Affairs, academic departments, and other offices).

Once information on an assignment or beat is received, the reporter then writes an article and submits it to the editor of the Rotunda. The story is then copy edited, and the final decision as to whether or not the piece will be published is made by the editor.

The finished article is type-set by being entered into a computer and printed out in print-ready form at the Farmville Herald's office. These articles are run through a waxer, cut out, and placed on a lay-out sheet, producing the original from which the paper is printed. After printing, the finished papers are bound and ready for distribution. Copies of the Rotunda are then placed in Lankford Student Union, Wynne, and Main Ruffner.

Though this process is lengthy, we hope that the students of Longwood feel the time spent was worthwhile. Anyone interested in working with the paper next year should fill out an application. The applications are available at the Information desk, and the door of the Rotunda office in Lankford.

Thank you again for your continued support of the Rotunda, and we look forward to serving again next year as the student newspaper of Longwood College.

OPINION

Where Does Our Money Go?

By KANDI PETTUS

If any of you were wondering where all of our money goes during the school year, you're not alone.

I have heard many complaints about the way our money for tuition is distributed throughout the year. There are so many new projects being worked on, old ones that haven't been finished and things that have been here that need work on and haven't even been touched. I feel that our money is being used in frivolous ways, without letting the students have any say so in how it is dispersed.

For starters, it really concerns me that the dining hall states that for our meal plans it is figured in that we will skip some of our meals, but yet there is enough money left over to serve a faculty dinner. In case you didn't realize, the money left over from the meals that we skip, goes towards a faculty dinner, which includes a big meal and an open bar.

Personally, I would like to decide where my money goes. When I signed up for Ox Fam, the hunger benefit, it was my choice to skip dinner and I knew where my meal was going to. I would rather my money from my uneaten meal go back into the college and serve some sort of beneficial purpose, rather than feeding the faculty.

Speaking of fixing up things, when is Grainger going to be finished? From what I can remember it has been under construction now since the fall of 1990. If this building were fixed then students would have a larger course schedule to choose from. Because of this one building being out of order, some students have had to work around an already impossible schedule to get the classes they need without overlapping them. Along with students, some professors have been inconvenienced as well.

Please don't get me wrong, I love Longwood. The campus is beautiful, the students are friendly and I like the fact that the teachers are on a one to one basis with the students. I'm sure that it is hard to keep a college financially stable, but maybe we need to take a little breather from spending money and make sure that it is going to the proper places.

One place that I would feel very comfortable with that extra money going, is to the infirmary. I know of people who have been told that they "just had a little cold" and came to find out they really had pneumonia. I have also known of cases in which they have mis-diagnosed bronchitis for a sore throat. If our money was put to good use we would have a full time doctor, instead of having to get up at 6 in the morning, to have a "real" doctor diagnose us.

Another thing that really bothers me is that we spent all of that money on a brand new library and all of the books that we have are not readily available to students. If the school took all of that time to build a new library, and it's very nice I might add, it should have been big enough to contain all of the books. Students should be able to just go in, browse around and pick up the book that they needed, instead of having to fill out a piece of paper and wait until the next day to receive it.

I am very happy to see a new dorm going up on campus, but where is everyone supposed to park? I know that people are tired of hearing others gripe about parking, but when you have to drive around for fifteen minutes to find a decent parking place, or park up at Wynne and wait for the police to come and get you, it gets pretty bad.

Before they ever started construction on the new dorm they should have taken that money and used it to upgrade some of the older dorms. I know that I would have liked to have had air conditioning in my dorm, or at least had the crap hanging from my walls fixed.

Letters To The Editor

Editor, The Rotunda:

I am writing in response to the letter two weeks ago by Cullen Johnson. As a senior Sociology major, I am also doing work at the Weyanoke Retirement Home. I find this work very rewarding and am delighted to hear that others are also enjoying the company of these wonderful people.

I started my work in January and have spent an average of eighteen hours a week at Weyanoke. Throughout these last four months of spending several days a week with these special people, I have learned a lot about each one of them, the elderly generation as a whole, and myself. It provides me with such a feeling of accomplishment to know that what I do makes them so happy.

The funny thing is that it is the smallest things which make them so happy. They don't ask a lot of me, just a simple "hello" or "how are you feeling today," means more to them than any one of you could imagine. Stopping by their room to chit-chat for five or ten minutes, filling their ice pitchers, or helping them downstairs to a meal rarely goes unacknowledged by the residents. Unlike many of those we come into contact within our everyday tasks, nothing is taken for granted.

Working with the residents at Weyanoke is both a rewarding and refreshing job. Everyone involved in Weyanoke — both staff and residents — have very special qualities about themselves which aid the group in working together and providing the best establishment for the older generation of Farmville.

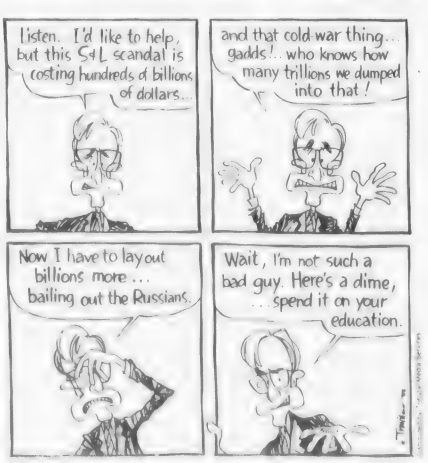
I have thoroughly enjoyed giving my time to these individuals and sadly plan my graduation. However, my experiences at Weyanoke will be remembered for a lifetime as well as the special friendships that I have made with everyone there. I can honestly say that never in my life have I felt so good about volunteering my time and services to others. Not a day has gone by at the Weyanoke that I have not felt like I have brightened someone else's day through some small gesture. I also urge you to take an hour out of your busy schedules and make the day of one of the residents at Weyanoke. Remember, it doesn't take much — a smile, a wave, or a simple hello will mean the world to each and every one of them.

Kathy DiMarino

Editor, The Rotunda:

I just wanted to say thank you to the editor of The Rotunda. After being a part of a paper I realize how much time, work and energy goes into making a paper worthwhile.

The Rotunda has come a long way since it was first started and it's good that students realize this. Working with layout, interviewing people, and making sure you have "all the facts straight," aren't as fun as they sound.



If you really think about it, a lot goes on on this campus, whether it is bad or good, and you have to have someone there to cover it. But even after the story has been covered, there is still a lot of work to be done. The writers have the easy part.

I think that the editor this year, and the editors in the following years should be commended for their dedication to the school paper. It takes a lot of time and energy to do something for every single person on this campus, and that's what this job entails.

Longwood Picks

By ERIN McCAY
Managing Editor

Though there are many people whom Longwood is proud to call a member of its community, there are a few without whom Longwood just wouldn't be the same.

Dr. Jim Crowl – for being the biggest student activist on campus, though he is understandably upset when the rest of us don't follow suit!

Dr. Laurence Hlad – for his lively and entertaining approach to teaching, which has gained more than one convert to a Sociology major. Only he could talk about gynecology and garage mechanics in the same class.

SGA President Darrell Wells – for his hard work and dedication to the SGA, which is slowly but surely making that organization a force to be reckoned with on Longwood's campus. Managing to do all that and remain sane is a tall order. Maybe next year he'll choose sanity, but we hope not.

Anita "Mom" Bailey – for being, in addition to a veritable fount of information on many subjects, a truly great person. And if she ever left, who would be able to read Phyllis Mable's handwriting?

Dr. Jack Millar – for making dry topics entertaining and challenging. Boy, I never realized how much incest, sadism, cretinism, adultery, lunacy, and general stupidity was around in the 1500's, 1600's, and 1700's. Those sure were the days!

Zav Dadabhoy – for always being there with helpful advice and ideas to all students and organizations. If we had the money and manpower to carry out all of his plans, Longwood would be bigger and better than UVA. It could happen ... NOT!

Jason Walker – for contributing so much to campus life, from top (lighting) to bottom (sidewalks) and for not keeping his mouth shut. Longwood needs more students like him.

Joan Fusco – for giving us pizza with everything ... pepperoni, extra cheese, and good humor.

MaryKaye Cochran – for paving the way for all those confused new students.

Phyllis Mable – for always being there. What more can we say?

Shirley Everette – for guiding the lost, informing the ignorant, and keeping everybody around here in line.

Pearl Agee – for keeping hysterical students calm when they are faced with (over-)due term papers.

William Woods – for protecting The Rotunda from printing anything that will send us to jail and for being the biggest Ren and Stimpy fan on campus. Yes, Mr. Woods, President Kennedy has been shot.

Electronic Processing Eases Financial Worries

By CASSANDRA YELLIS
Staff Reporter

A new system called Electronic Pell Processing is set to make things easier for parents, students, and the Financial Aid Office itself.

A Pell Grant is a federal award ranging from $250-$2400, given to undergraduate students who are eligible. The award is available only to those students who have not yet earned their first degree. Usually, students who receive Pell Grants come from families who have a combined total income of less than $23,000, or several family members in college at the same time. The actual amount however depends upon the results of the Financial Aid Form or FAF.

The processing system is able to make changes to Pell Grant student aid reports electronically through the Financial Aid Office. The process, which manually could take up to two weeks, will be shortened to about five days or less, which is about half the time. The Financial Aid Office will make the corrections on the computer system and send it through to the Pell system at the Department of Education. The Department sends the corrections back to the Financial Aid Office so they can print an ESAR (Electronic Student Aid Report) for the student to sign and finalize the process. Karen Schinabeck, the Assistant Director of Financial Aid stresses that students must still send in the original pink SAR, but the correction process can be done electronically.

Schinabeck plans to begin the process right away and she states that she is "anticipating a normal amount of confusion initially, but it will become easier as everyone gets used to the process." The office will become acquainted with the process pretty fast because changes will be run into the Pell system once a week. This way errors will be corrected electronically on a weekly basis.

Schinabeck will send a complete fact sheet to students at a later date, outlining the exact procedures for the electronic process. The Electronic Pell Process is brand new to Longwood, but the results promise to be very beneficial to the Financial Aid Office and to eligible students.

Isensee Finds Home In Farmville

By KANDI PETTUS
Staff Reporter

Dr. Reinhard Isensee was born in a small village named Grossbeeren, about 40 miles away from Berlin, but for the last few months Farmville has been his home.

Dr. Isensee's first ten years of schooling was in his home town of Grossbeeren. When he finished there he went on to the secondary abiture, which is higher up than an American high school. This abiture enabled him to go on to a university.

In 1973, he attended Humboldt University in what used to be East Berlin. He majored in English and German. After attending Humboldt for four years, he bacame certified to teach English and German of grades 5-12.

Dr. Isensee decided to stay on and work on his doctorate for three years after graduation.

He became a member of the substitution department of American Studies and taught at Humboldt. His major topics that were taught were the History of the United States and Civics of the U.S.

In 1979, Dr. Isensee made his first visit to the United States. He was a teaching assistant for a full college year at Colby College in Waterville, Maine. While he was there he taught classes in German, History, Literature, and Grammar.

In 1980, Dr. Isensee went back to Germany to finish up his doctorate and get his degree. When he received this degree he became an assistant professor, because he had only completed one of the two Ph.D.'s needed to become a full fledged professor.

Dr. Isensee started working on his second doctorate in the mid-1980's. The topic he is working on is Young Adult Literature in the United States. He stated that it takes eight to ten years to finish one doctorate.

In 1984, he was invited to become a member of the American Council of Learned Society. It supplies grants for people interested in American Studies, and he took advantage of one to come over to America.

He has also visited the University of New York at Buffalo. He stayed there for a year and continued to work on his doctorate. He did not go there to teach, his visit was purely for research.

After that year he returned to Germany and continued to teach.

In September of 1991, Dr. Isensee and his family came to Farmville. He is very excited about his stay here, because he is actually teaching Young Adult Literature to American students.

Out of all of the different subjects he is able to teach, Dr. Isensee enjoys literature the most. He even finds American Literature more interesting than German Literature.

His stay here at Longwood ends in the latter part of June. He will then return to Germany and continue to teach and finish his second doctorate.

Dr. Isensee wishes to thank the Longwood community, and the town of Farmville for a very welcome stay. He would also like to thank Professor John Reynolds for arranging his well prepared stay.

While here, his wife Ilona, and his four year old daughter Fanny-Lynne live in a house provided by the college. Dr. Isensee says that "The three of us are very happy here and are impressed with the hospitality and friendliness."

Players Employ Kabuki, Noh Styles In Nightingale & Cranes

By ROSEANN PITZL
Staff Reporter

Performances for the Longwood Players two Japanese plays The Nightingale and A Thousand Cranes, will start this Saturday. Both plays will be performed on April 25th at 8, and April 27th at 7. The Nightingale, will be first, on both evenings. Matinees will be on April 27 and 28th at 9:45 and 12:30 with The Nightingale first on the 27th and A Thousand Cranes first on the 28th.

"We're incorporating Japanese production elements in these plays, although they're not Japanese productions," states the director of both plays, Pamela Arkin. They are part of Longwood's "Opening Doors to the World" series, an effort to expose students to other cultures. All of the actors are enrolled in the Japanese Theatre class.

"Both plays are stories about love and peace," Arkin said. "I don't care how old you are: these plays are for all generations. Anybody who likes theater should come to them. Just for the spectacle of them. And they can be enjoyed by entire families because they're not offensive at all."

The Nightingale, based on a story by Hans Christian Anderson, is an adaptation of a famous Chinese folk tale which was rewritten and set in Japan by Michael Price Nelson. It will be done in Kabuki style.

"Kabuki style is very colorful," Arkin states, "very lively and has lots of action." "It could be compared to Las Vegas shows." Arkin shared the plot of this work about an emperor who "has everything, but is lonely and bored." In it "a nightingale comes to live in his palace and its song is so beautiful that the bird is given gifts and treated specially. One day someone gives the emperor a mechanical nightingale which also sings beautifully but lacks a heart. The real nightingale's feelings are hurt and she flies away." The main theme of the play is revealed in the emperor's realization that it is "wrong to try to possess something," as he attempted with the nightingale.

The role of the nightingale will be played by a junior at Farmville's Prince Edward Academy, Alexandria Palamountain. She has appeared in several Longwood and Waterworks productions.

The emperor will be peformed by Longwood's David Richards, a junior from Richmond. Arkin has done the play with the Birmingham Children's Theater in Alabama as an actor, and it was from there that the costumes for this show was rented.

A Thousand Cranes will be peformed using the Noh style, which Arkin compares to classical ballet. "In both there's a lot of movement and all of it means something. A lot of the nuances would be lost on us, but it's important that we be exposed to other cultures through their art forms. A lot of directors have borrowed conventions from Japanese theater, particularly Bertolt Brecht."

Written by Kathryn Schultz Miller, it is about a 12 year old girl named Sasaki, who is stricken with leukemia as a result of the 1955 bombing of her city, in World War II. While in the hospital she is reminded of the belief that if "a sick person folds a thousand origami cranes, the gods will grant a wish and restore her health." She undertakes this in the course of the play.

Three years after Sadako's death, her friends erect a statue in her honor on top of a granite pedestal to symbolize Mount Horiai, the fabled mountain of paradise. She holds in her outstretched arms, a golden crane. Beneath her are colorful leis, each a thousand cranes, that people from all over the world have sent to the statue in Hiroshima.

"A Thousand Cranes is very inspiring and very moving," Arkin states, "A lot of children have read the book, which is about trying to live in a world of peace. The crane in Japanese culture symbolizes many things: Cranes mate for life, which is why (they are) embroidered on wedding kimonos."

The part of Sadako will be played by Teresa Goding, a sophomore from Bedford, and Miss Longwood finalist, who recently appeared in The Importance of Being Earnest.

"Students in the Japanese Theatre class have learned how to fold origami cranes and we're going to box them up and send them to Hiroshima," Arkin said. "We are mailing folding instructions to the school children who are coming to the play, and instructions also will be provided at the door."

"It will be a long time before plays like this can be put on again. The students are talented and love performing for younger audiences. Anybody can understand the shows. There's nothing strange about what we're doing. It's just that the way we're presenting them is different. Both are beautiful stories that have something to say," explained Arkin.

Speech On Gay Issues Draws Crowd

By THOMAS D. BIRCHETT, IV
Staff Reporter

Recently, a group of Longwood students filled a room in the Student Union to listen to George Grenia speak about current gay issues on both the campus and national level.

Grenia is the advisor for William and Mary's support group for sexual minorities. He is also a campus minister at the college.

He began the lecture by stating that he was gay, at which point a few members of the audience chose to leave the room. His openness led directly to the question of whether and why he should be open about his sexual orientation.

He reasoned that gays cannot keep their sexual orientation private because they are not allowed to. They can legally be fired, denied access to housing, and denied Blue Cross insurance coverage on the basis of their sexual preference.

Grenia quickly traced the history of our country's abuse of the rights of gays going as far back as the first English settlement in Jamestown, where two men were accused of being gay and hanged.

He then pointed out that each of the 13 colonies had anti-homosexuality laws. These laws became invalid when the new union formed, and remained that way until the late nineteenth century.

Grenia then explained that gays are presently "at risk," noting the high incidence of name-calling, defacing, and physical attacks against gays today.

The second myth that Grenia addressed was the misconception that gays are"...sluts." He reminded the audience that gays are put in an awkward position since it is illegal for anyone to marry within the same sex.

Another myth that was brought up was the common connection between homosexuality and the cause and spread of AIDS. Grenia argued that this myth has been debunked due to the large amount of education on the disease and the decrease of new cases for homosexuals, as opposed to heterosexuals. He also noted that problems are often blamed on a scapegoat. Other groups, such as Haitians, drug-users, and hemophiliacs have been blamed with these things as well.

Grenia attacked the myth that all gays have a fascination with cross-gender role-playing. He explained that when these mannerisms do occur, they are often a form of defense or an expression of freedom, and are a result of living in a society that, for the most part, does not accept them.

Although Grenia stated that he did not wish to address the subject from a religious point of view, one audience member asked him to defend his sexuality as a Christian. Grenia explained that according to his studies, the Bible does not address homosexuality at all. He pointed out that the two most often quoted passages in the Bible used as a basis for anti-homosexuality in Christianity are misinterpreted.

He also stated that he feels that the Christian God should not be and does not wish to be worshipped by sex. This, he feels, is a form of cultic activity.

He pointed out that none of the words used to refer to gays carry positive, or even neutral, connotations. For example, the words "queer," "fag," "dyke," and even "gay" cause tension when they're used by people in most situations.

Even the word "homosexual" is negative, said Grenia, "because it has the word 'sex' right there in the middle," which incorrectly implies that the issue is about sex.

Grenia also remarked that the word "homosexual" is a relatively new term — less than 100 years old — invented for use in the then new science of psychology.

Grenia felt that most people agree that the word "gay" and "bi" are generally the best words to use, if any are needed at all.

Grenia also introduced a commonly believed theory that everyone is bisexual, falling somewhere on a continuum between the two extremes — homosexuality and heterosexuality.

Before opening the lecture to questions and comments from the audience, Grenia reemphasized a point that he had been making from the start — that homosexuality is a normal, but not standard. He compared it to being left-handed or red-haired.

He then asked the audience to talk about common stereotypes and myths of homosexuality, and to make comments and raise questions.

The first person mentioned that gays could change if they wanted to. Grenia pointed out that the same is true for people that are left-handed, but, he explained, there is no reason for them to do so. The same is true for gays — there is no reason for them to change.

Grenia ended his discussion with an explanation of how the support group at William and Mary works, and he stressed the importance of not requiring anyone to be forced to accept any label, and of trying to maintain a healthy attitude about yourself and life in general, regardless of sexual orientation.

The lecture was presented by the Longwood/Hampden-Sydney support group for sexual minorities, Unity and the Student Affairs Office. Any comments, questions, or inquiries about the lecture, Unity, or this topic can be left on the organization's answering service at 395-2552.

Payne Named Player Of The Week

LORRI PAYNE

By Greg Prouty

Freshman shortstop Lorri Payne, who batted .583 with two home runs and seven runs-batted-in last week, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period April 12-19. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

Payne went 5-8 in a doubleheader sweep at Bridgewater last Friday as Longwood closed its season with a 13-11 record. She hit a triple and double with two RBIs as the Lady Lancers won the first game 8-3, and the second 11-2.

In a doubleheader against Mary Washington on Wednesday, Payne was 5-9 with a home run, double and three RBIs. Longwood took the first game 5-1 before losing the nightcap 6-5.

Last Sunday, Payne was 4-7 with a homer and two RBIs as LC swept a doubleheader from James Madison's club team 5-1 and 21-3.

Payne finished her initial season with a .387 batting average, including a home run, three triples, six doubles, and 11 RBIs. Her doubles total tied for second on the team, while her batting average was third-best. Statistics are compiled from games against varsity teams from four-year schools only.

A physical education major, Payne attended Clover Hill High School in Chesterfield where she was a four-year starter and played in the 1991 Virginia High School East-West All-Star game.

Longwood Boasts 28-7 Record

Lancer Baseball Ranked 11th; Win Streak At 14

Longwood's baseball team jumped to 11th in this week's Collegiate Baseball Division II poll after being unranked last week. The ranking came on the heels of a 5-3, 9-5 sweep of then 13th ranked USC Spartanburg last Wednesday and a 9-5 win over Randolph-Macon Thursday.

Now 28-7, the Lancers will take a 14-game win streak into the final week of the season. This week's games at Liberty Monday and at St. Augustine's Tuesday were canceled at the request of the host schools. In remaining games, Longwood hosts St. Paul's Wednesday in Crewe with a doubleheader starting at 1 p.m., visits Christopher-Newport for a single game at 3 p.m. Thursday, hosts Virginia State for two Saturday in Crewe at 1 p.m. and closes out the regular season with a twin bill against Maryland Eastern Shore at Salisbury State Sunday starting at 1 p.m.

Longwood, with 14 straight wins, has a shot at breaking the school record for consecutive victories (16) which was set last season.

Following the close of the regular season, the Lancers are looking for their second straight trip to the NCAA Division II Playoffs. Longwood would likely play in the North Atlantic Regional Tournament, tentatively scheduled for May 16-19 at an undetermined site.

A Monumental Sweep

How big was Longwood's 5-3, 9-5 baseball sweep of South Carolina Spartanburg at Crewe Wednesday afternoon?

"Monumental!" said Lancer coach Buddy Bolding. "The wins are huge," said senior tri-captain and team leader Scott Abell.

One couldn't blame the Lancers for being a bit excited after taking two from the Rifles, 13th in last week's Collegiate Baseball Division II poll while the Lancers were unranked.

Weaver Delivers Clutch Showing

Spartanburg sent their ace lefthander, senior Pete Agostinelli to the mound for Wednesday's opener at Golubic Stadium. Agostinelli, came in with a 5-1 record and an earned run average of 2.77.

Longwood countered with junior Kyle Weaver, 5-3 with an e.r.a. of 6.43. Weaver pitched brilliantly, limiting the Rifles to one hit and no runs over the first four innings. He finished with six strikeouts and no walks, while allowing six hits and two earned runs. He struck out the side in the second inning, repeatedly finding the corner with his curve ball.

The Lancers broke through against Agostinelli in the third inning and put the game on ice in the sixth with three runs when Todd Bowman and Shawn Jones cracked back-to-back homers after a Chris Porter single.

Singles by Jones and Terry Taylor, a sacrifice by Jeff Toms and a base hit by John Hutzler produced one run in the third. With the bases loaded, Chris Tyson was hit by a pitch, scoring another run for a 2-0 lead.

Tucker Comes Alive in Nightcap

Wednesday's second game turned into more of a slugfest than a pitcher's duel. Longwood finished with 10 hits and Spartanburg 11, but the Lancers turned a pair of double plays and got four RBIs from All-American shortstop Mike Tucker.

Tucker hit a two-run double to left field in the second inning, after a Rifle error had helped the Lancers score twice. In the fourth, Tucker delivered a two-RBI single which moved the Lancer advantage to 7-1.

Spartanburg, which had a 1-0 lead in the first, scored two in the fifth and got homers from Ben Wages and Mark Hughes in the sixth to trim the deficit to 7-5, but Bill Martz came on in relief of winner Chris Mullins to retire the side. After Longwood scored twice in the sixth for a 9-5 edge, Martz finished up, helped by a double play from second baseman Jeff Toms to Tucker to Bill Reeves at first.

Tucker, Chris Porter and Jones had two hits each for Longwood in the second game while Chris Tyson and John Hutzler had RBI hits for the Lancers.

Mullins moved his record to 5-2, pitching four and two/thirds innings. He gave up seven hits and three earned runs while fanning two and walking two. He came on in relief of Kyle Weaver who had started the second contest. Martz got his first save of the season.

Flippen Gets Fifth Win at R-MC

Junior lefthander Wyatt Flippen moved his record to 5-0 with nine innings of mount work Thursday and third baseman Terry Taylor went 4-4 with a double, a triple and two RBIs as the Lancers beat homesta. ding Randolph-Macon 9-5.

Longwood collected nine straight hits and scored eight runs in the third inning to come back from a 2-0 first inning deficit and take a commanding lead. Taylor drove in the two runs with a double and John Hutzler hit a three-run inside-the-park homer to highlight the outburst.

Flippen scattered 10 hits (all singles) and walked two while giving up just one earned run.

Longwood Lacrosse Defeats Randolph-Macon

By Greg Prouty

Longwood's nationally-ranked lacrosse squad defeated Randolph-Macon 12-9 last Thursday at First Avenue Field to improve its record to 9-2.

With one game remaining, coach Sandy Bridgeman's squad has a chance to equal the school mark for victories at 10, which the 1980-81 team established finishing 10-5-1. This year's winning percentage is the best-ever, .818, as the 1985-86 team finished 7-2 for a .778 percentage.

For the third-straight week, the Lady Lancers are ranked in the Intercollegiate Women's Lacrosse Coaches Association/Brine Division II poll. Longwood is ranked fifth in the April 16 poll.

Against Randolph-Macon, LC got four goals each from sophomores Kim Chapman and Anita Warford. Senior All-American Lara Cini added three goals, while junior Katherine Carlofe contributed one goal. Chapman and Cini each added an assist as well.

Cini now has 44 goals this spring, 112 in her career to rank second all-time at Longwood.

Warford also controlled six ground balls to lead the defense, while Cini and junior Denise Hanley each controlled five ground balls. Junior goalkeeper Barbie Partlow made 11 saves in the net for the Lady Lancers.

Longwood was playing its final game Tuesday at Sweet Briar beginning at 4 p.m.

Saunders Completes Unbeaten Year

Lady Netters End Season At 4-5

Sophomore Melanie Saunders ended the year unbeaten in singles, but Longwood's women's tennis team met defeat in its final match of the season Monday, falling to a strong Hollins College squad 6-3.

Saunders won her ninth match of the spring at No. 2 singles, rallying from 1-0 set deficit to win the final, decisive set in a tie-breaker. Coupled with her 6-0 singles mark from fall play, Saunders ended the year at 15-0, best record by a Lady Lancer netter in at least the last 16 years.

"Melanie lost the first set 6-1, but she wouldn't quit," said Longwood coach Angie Coppedge. "I thought she'd find a way to win and she did. Going unbeaten is quite a feat, and she has won numerous matches in three sets."

Also finishing strong were junior Jenny Holm, 7-2 in the spring at No. 1 singles and 14-3 for the year. Sophomore Jennifer Risko also won her final spring singles matches, ending up 8-1 and 14-2 for the year.

While Longwood had only a 4-5 ledger for the spring, the overall mark for the year is 11-6, (7-1 in the fall) best overall record for a women's tennis team at Longwood since 1976-77. Coupled with last year's 9-5 mark, Coppedge has led the Lady Lancers to a 20-11 record over the past two years.

Marzullo Is Zone Qualifier

Lancer Riders Complete Successful Season

The 1991-92 Longwood Riding team, under the direction of coach Suzie Rogers, completed a successful year, with two Regional Qualifiers and one Zone Qualifier.

Highlighting the season was novice on-the-flat division competitor Katy Marzullo who finished third in regionals at Sweet Briar April 6 and third in the Zone Qualifier at the University of Virginia April 12. Marzullo was the top regional competitor in her division at UVA.

Also performing well for Longwood was Teresa Farkas, fifth in the advanced walk-trot-canter division at regionals.

Longwood took part in horse show competitions at the University of Maryland, Goucher, William & Mary, Sweet Briar and Randolph-Macon Woman's College. The Lancers were third overall in a show at the University of Virginia.

Members of the team, in addition to Marzullo and Farkas, were captain Stephanie Harbourt, recording officer Greg Wasserman, Ann Behnken, Wendy Crosby, Susan Pope, Lori Lazear, Wendy Pulley, Kathryn Layne, Kirsten Hite and Amanda Phaup.

The team practiced at Blue Willow Farm in Buckingham.

Close Season With 13-11 Record

Longwood Softball Sweeps Bridgewater

By Greg Prouty

Longwood's softball team traveled to Bridgewater last Friday and swept a season-ending doubleheader by scores of 8-3 and 11-2 to finish the season with a record of 13-11.

In the opener, the Lady Lancers scored four runs in the first inning and never looked back in rolling to the 8-3 victory. Scoring runs in the first were freshmen Lorri Payne and Mari Willen, along with sophomore Ana Litton and senior Laura Marks. Payne, Litton, and Willen reached on singles, while Marks doubled. Senior Chris Gronke also singled in the inning to drive in a run.

Marks added a solo homer in the third and Longwood scored three runs in the fifth to complete the scoring. Payne, Litton, and Willen once-again opened with singles, with help scoring from Gronke's sacrifice and Mark's single. Marks and Willen both went 3-4 to pace the LC attack.

Sophomore Andrea Wrenn took the pitching win going seven innings. She allowed seven hits with the three runs earned, four strikeouts and two walks. Wrenn finishes the season with a record of 6-5.

In the nightcap, the Lady Lancers scored five runs in the second, four in the third, and one each in the fifth and sixth innings to take an 11-2 triumph. Scoring in the second were Gronke, Marks, senior Cassie Mullenix, and juniors Tara Confalone and Ginny Henry. Gronke and Mullenix had doubles in the inning, while Marks, Confalone, and Henry each singled.

Marks, Confalone, Henry, and freshman Becky Condrey all scored in the third, as Confalone and Henry each singled and Payne added a run-producing double. Gronke singled and scored in the fourth on a single by Mullenix, and Marks singled and scored in the sixth on a single by Confalone. Confalone was 3-3, Marks 3-4, and Payne 3-5 to lead the Lady Lancer attack.

Junior Kathy Brown picked up the mound win, pitching seven innings. She allowed just two hits, but gave up 13 walks with both runs earned. She finishes with a 7-6 record.

STUDENTS PROTEST KING DECISION

By ERIN McCAY
Managing Editor

"L.A., no way, we need justice today!" was the chant echoing across Longwood's campus April 30 as almost one hundred Longwood students demonstrated against the acquittal of the police officers involved in the videotaped beating of Rodney King.

In March 1991, Rodney King was beaten by four white Los Angeles police officers: Sgt. Stacey Koon, Officer Theodore Briseno, Officer Laurence Powell, and Officer Timothy Wind.

King sustained nearly a dozen skull fractures, including a shattered eye socket and destroyed cheekbone. He currently suffers from severe headaches and partial facial paralysis.

On the evening of April 29, 1992, eight Longwood students first heard the trial results in the Rodney King case. Upon learning that all four policemen accused of the brutal beating of Rodney King, a black man, had been acquitted, the students decided to stage a demonstration on campus.

They proceeded to contact their friends, as well as all sororities on campus, black and white, requesting their support and asking that all students stand together. The demonstration was motivated almost completely by Longwood's Association of Black Students (ABS).

Students bearing signs reading "Wasn't One King Enough?", "Will The Rodney King Trial Set a Precedent?", "Freedom Rang Too Loudly for the Four Policemen", and, "Who are the Real Criminals in the Rodney King Case?" marched through campus and prayed for peace and racial equality.

Longwood students expressed their feelings at a non-violent demostration held around the fountain.

"We are not anti-white, we are pro-justice"

Doncella Hampton, President of the Association of Black Students, was angered by the events taking place in Los Angeles. "We really think that we need to take a stand. If it can happen to [King], it can happen to anyone. Something needs to be done about this."

Johnail Arrington, Vice President of ABS agreed. "Black students are standing together to tell everyone about the injustice that was done to Rodney King."

Arrington stressed the non-violent nature of the gathering. "This is not a protest, it is a demonstration," he commented. "We are only doing this to let everyone at Longwood know about what happened yesterday. This is non-violent. We just want people to know how we stand."

Arrington also made clear the tone of the demonstration. "We are not anti-white, we are pro-justice. We are not for any violent acts. Unfortunately, many people don't know anything about the case. It was unfair and justice should be for all people."

The racial overtones of recent events are quite apparent, however. The fairness of the trial is considered suspect by many, both black and white. One major factor contributing to this impression is the make-up of the jury. There were no black jurors serving, and only one Asian and one Hispanic.

"It...says it's O.K. to ... kick the crap out of them and ... you'll walk," remarked Steve Lerman, attorney for Mr. King.

"The system failed us," commented Tom Bradley, Mayor of Los Angeles. "We saw what we saw, and what we saw was a crime."

Expressing an opposing view, President Bush called for "calm and respect for the law," adding "[T]he court system has worked."

Members of ABS were not the only students making a stand, however. Shelly Church, a white student, stated "I think this is something that effects everyone. More people should be out here today."

SGA President Darrell Wells was contacted immediately after the demonstration began. "I am not really sure what they are trying to accomplish with this," he said. "I'm not very informed on the subject."

Upon being asked if he agreed with what they were trying to say, Wells answered "I don't agree with all the violence in L.A., but if this is a peaceful way of saying what the people in L.A. are trying to do, then yes, I agree."

Wells went on further to support the court's decision. "I think that this is a decision that the court made." Asked if he stood by what the court said, he replied "I think you pretty much have to if you are going to put any faith into our justice system at all."

"The system failed us"

Some members of the student body disagree. "We are not going to sit idly by and let these things happen," said Ricky Grimes, a rising senior and chemistry/pre-med major who participated in the demonstration.

Many students not participating in the protest echoed his opinion "I agree with their stand because they were wrong in L.A." stated senior math major Michael Ginnelli.

Three members of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority concurred. "We agree with them. What happened is not right. It's not fair for anybody to be treated like that.

One highly-placed administrator felt quite strongly about the whole Rodney King episode. "The reaction to the Rodney King trial decision is merely a response to the urban plight and racial indifference shown by our government in the past 12 years."

He cited some of the possible causes for the current unrest. "LA's inner city was already suffering the worst of the recession. 45% unemployment rate, 50% arrest/crime record, bankruptcy, and gang violence are all contributing factors. The King decision was merely the final catalyst that has enable people to stand up say that they are not going to and take this anymore."

This administrator supported the actions of the students. "Its nice to see our students aware of what's going on and voicing their concerns. Its only when our society as a whole does so that we can draw attention to this problems."

Phyllis Mable, Vice President for Student Affairs, also showed her support for the students. "I think that our students who are doing the protest are doing exactly what they should and I feel that they are expressing appropriate thoughts and appropriate feelings that people all over the United States feel."

Longwood President William F. Dorrill had no comment.

The non-violent demonstration staged by Longwood's students was not the only Rodney King-related protest which occured in the United States today.

Campuses in Washington, D.C., Minneapolis, Boston, and Atlanta were all the scene of protests, marches, or vigils. Though, like Longwood's, most of the student's protesting were peaceful, some colleges and universities did experience episodes of violence.

So far, at least seventeen have died and over 480 have been injured in the violence that has been the aftermath of the King trial decision.

In Los Angeles, a dawn-to-dusk curfew has been imposed. Schools were closed, and the city presently awaits the arrival of the National Guard.

90's Relive The 60's In More Ways Than One

By ERIN McCAY
Managing Editor

The 1990's fashion scene saw a resurgence in clothing styles that were popular in the late 1960's.

Known as the "retro-sixties" look, apparel designers were again producing baby-doll dresses, mini skirts, and wild, psychadelic prints. Models with sixties hair styles graced the covers of Vogue and Mademoiselle.

On the music scene, MTV celebrated its own "Summer of Love," harkening back to the days of flower children and Haight-Asbury. The original Jefferson Airplane produced a new album, new groups, such as Deee-lite, emulated the look and sounds of that decade.

But the darker side of the turbulent sixties is also making a reappearence.

Similar to the furor over "druggie" lyrics of groups such as the Byrds and the Bob Dylan, there is currently a strong movement by some to ban "obscene" music, such as that performed by 2 Live Crew.

LSD, the drug of choice during the late sixties, is making a comeback on college campuses nationwide.

And, tragically, many are still fighting battles that began thirty years ago.

Women face the potential overturning of Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court decision making abortion legal, as well as a landmark case in the furthering of basic human rights.

And the racial tension and violence our country is experiencing now is similar to that of the sixties. Like Los Angeles this evening, Detroit and other cities experienced devastating race riots from which they have yet to fully recover.

Longwood Raises Tuition 9.9 Percent

Longwood College students from the state of Virginia will pay an increase in tuition of 9.9 percent next year.

This decision was reached at the Board of Visitors meeting of April 267, 1992.

This increase creates a $656 addition to the present $6,594 tuition Virginia residents pay, raising it to $7,250.

Those students who live out of state will see an increase of 13.5 percent in their tuition rates, raising the 1992-93 fee to $11,576.

According to Longwood President William F. Dorrill, the calculation of charges was "heavily impacted by another five percent reduction in State funding, which we are permitted to replace with tuition dollars."

Dr. Dorrill also noted that the State supplied 71.4 percent of the education cost in 1991-92, but with the new cuts, this support decreases to 55.99 percent, placing Virginia "among the bottom twelve states in per-student state appropriations."

The higher tuition will prevent faculty and staff layoffs. This will enable the college to participate in the Higher Education

Despite this increase in tuition, Virginia students attending Longwood College will pay less for 1992-93 than similar students at approximately 50 percent of all Virginia colleges and universities.

One bright note for students is an increase in financial aid available to students. According to Rick Hurley, Vice President for Business and Legislative Affairs, appropriations from he state for the 1992-94 biennium double the current allocations for financial aid. The amounts allocated will be $516,000 the first year and $1,023,000 by the end of the second year.

The Board also approved the 1992-93 Internal Operating Budget. This budget totals more than $31 million, a 6.3 increase over last year.

The admissions policy for first year students and transfer students was revised to reflect a higher criteria for selection. The minimum SAT score is now 770, which is 20 points higher than last year, and the number of required high school courses rose from 16 to 18.

A number of faculty members were promoted at this meeting. Mark Baldridge (art), Dr. Maurice Maxwell (chemistry), and Dr. Sue Shaw (economics) were promoted to Professor. Dr. Frank Bacon (finance), Dr. Ray Brastow (economics), and Moffat Evans (theatre) were promoted to Associate Professor. Anne Oliver (art) was granted tenure.

Dr. Dorrill also reported on numerous developments at Longwood, including the increase in applications, a possible name change to Women's College, and creation of an exchange program with a university in Honduras.

COMMENTARY

Editorial

Bravo to those students who took part in yesterday's protest against the trial results of the Rodney King case!

The apathy which has afflicted this campus in the past seems to be dissipating, but is its appalling that the catalyst for this welcome show of student action was one of the most infamous court decisions of recent years.

The students were completely correct to demonstrate. It is the travesty of justice which has occurred that should make every caucasian in America at least hang his or her head in shame, if they are unwilling to scream in protest.

How can a country that prides itself on equality for all of its citizens stand for such a blatent misuse of the justice system?

Rodney King lost what little chance he had for a fair review of the charges against his aggressors when the location of the trial was moved to Simi Valley, California.

It was from the voter registration rolls of that area that a jury was chosen. Incredibly, not one juror chosen was black!

The only members of the twelve-person jury who were not white were one Hispanic and one Asian.

Are there no black voters in the entire Simi Valley?

But technically, Rodney King's brutalizers did receive a fair trial. Though the jurors were presented with overwhelming evidence to the contrary (they were on that videotape, weren't they?), all four of King's attackers were acquitted.

And what were the results? Officers working out of the same San Fernando Valley police station as the accused traded "high-fives," slapped each other on the back, and, ironically, "thrust their fists in the air," a gesture similar to that employed by blacks during the early days of the civil rights movement.

Few others were pleased by the verdict.

Violence has broken out in Atlanta, New York, and, not surprisingly, Los Angeles. Both Atlanta and Los Angeles are currently abiding by an enforced curfew. Schools and businesses have been closed. Fires rage, stores are looted and injuries, both mortal and not, have been reported.

At press time, seventeen people had died as a direct result of the violence, and over four hundred had been injured.

We do not condone the violence. No one wanted more injuries to occur. But the situation in Los Angeles seems to have been deliberately mishandled by the Los Angeles Police Department. When reports of rioting began to trickle in, the police were obviously slow in responding.

Is this going to turn into a scenario wherein police chief Daryl Gates can simply shrug and say "See, they are only animals anyway. Rodney King must have provoked that attack!"?

We hope not. But we also understand, and share, the feelings of rage and frustration felt this evening by all Americans with a conscience.

No one, whatever race, gender, religious denomination, or economic level they belong to, should become victims of society as a whole. But people of color have in the past and continue to be the scapegoats of society.

Many of society's ills, from the drug problem, to poverty, to lower education levels, have been blamed on blacks or Hispanics.

Many whites seem unwilling to accept the fact that they are responsible for the situation today, not those whose ancestors were forced from their homes into unwilling bondage.

We grieve that Rodney King was made to endure the savagery of the L.A.P.D. We lament those whose lives have been lost in recent episodes of violence.

And we hope that those sacrifices were not made in vain. America must be made to see the uselessness of continuing with its policy of descrimination and racism.

E. Randel Osburn, of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, stated "If you were in South Africa, you would expect it. The response of the jury is barbaric."

South Africa has taken great strides forward in the abolishment of unfair racial discrimination. When will American follow suit?

Orientation is key to success

Freshmen Start Year Right

The over 700 people who are Longwood first year students have an advantage shared by no other incoming freshmen in the country. They are fortunate enough to have experienced Preview '92 and S.A.I.L. (Students Actively Involved in Longwood) Week '92, two programs designed specifically to ease a first year student's transition to college life.

Preview '92 took place between June 27 and July 10, and offered various programs on life at Longwood for both prospective students and their parents. All incoming students, residential and commuter, as well as transfer students, were invited to attend Preview.

Commuters who chose to take advantage of the program spent a day working with current Longwood students and administrators. The special needs of commuters were discussed in these programs, and the students were able to plan a tentative schedule for the 1992 Fall semester.

Residential students and their parents were given a taste of residence hall life for their Preview activities. Those attending lived in Curry or Frazer for two days while they participated in the Preview activities.

Preview activities for all groups included programs on campus life, skits, parties, the "Preview Olympics," and open question and answer periods.

S.A.I.L. Week began Thursday, August 20 and will continue until Thursday, August 27. All first year students and transfer students were required to attend a number of programs on topics ranging from acquaintance rape to partying positive to Longwood's honor code, as part of S.A.I.L. Week. Students also met for their Longwood seminar class and various social programs.

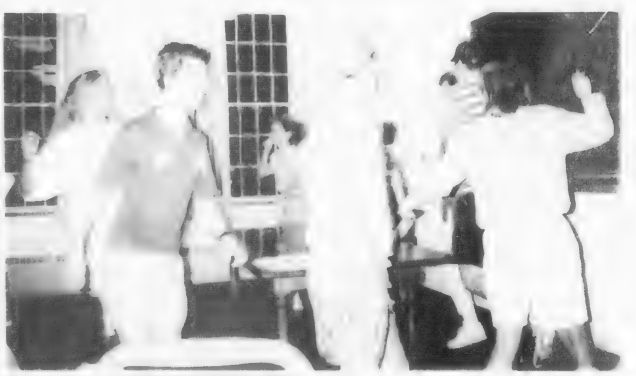
Both programs are designed and coordinated by the Office of Student Development and spearheaded by MaryKaye Cochran. Ms. Cochran, who has headed Longwood's orientation programs for a number of years, is key to making both Preview and S.A.I.L. Week successful.

Working with Ms. Cochran were a number of Longwood students. Acting as orientation leaders, these students were responsible for taking students and parents on tours of the campus, going with orientation groups to all Preview and S.A.I.L. Week activities, and basically answering any questions on aspects of campus life.

Some of the orientation leaders will also be working as co-teachers of the Longwood Seminar class. Co-chairmen of the orientation leaders were Zhan Caplan and Christina Galloway, who coordinated all the training for the orientation leaders.

College Athletics Not Women's Game

Men's Sports Mean More Money



(CPS) - A survey just released by the National Collegiate Athletic Association shows that men's collegiate sports have twice as many participants as women's sports and that men's sports receive five times more money for recruiting.

The survey was requested by the NCAA's Women Athletic Administrators and is planned to be used to determine a college's or university's progress toward achieving gender equity.

According to the NCAA, the disparity between men's and women's sports is largely the result of football and the lack of an equivalent sport for women.

The NCAA also said that the survey was not meant to gauge a school's compliance with Title IX, the federal law that bars sex discrimination at federally funded schools.

As a result of the survey, the NCAA plans to appoint a task force to make recommendations on how the NCAA should make progress toward achieving gender equity.

Bush Signs Education Bill

On July 23, 1992, George Bush signed the Higher Education Reauthorization Bill. This Bill is one part of President Bush's "America 2000" legislation, a program which Bush says will create a "new generation of break-the-mold New American Schools; world class standards and a system of voluntary national exams that measure progress that schools make toward meeting those standards; broad flexibility for teachers and principals to help children achieve greater learning; and parental choice of schools so that middle- and low-income families have more of the same choices of schools for their children that are now the preserves of wealthier families."

According to a Bush press release, the bill has a number of positive features. One is an increase of annual Stafford Loan limits for undergraduate students beyond their first year, with the pro-ration of annual limits according to program length, and increases in the annual and aggregate limits for Supplemental Loans for Students.

Another aspect of the bill is the inclusion of a 6.5% combined origination/insurance fee to offset a substantial portion of the cost to the government for the new "unsubsidized" student loan entitlement.

There are now new requirements for annual independent compliance audits of lenders, guaranty agencies, secondary markets, and third party servicers. Lenders are also required to offer graduated or income-sensitive repayment schedules to borrowers.

Also included in the bill are academic achievement component in need-based student aid programs. The academic criteria for determining student eligibility. These criteria are: (1) completion of specified minimum college preparatory course work; (2) 2.5 GPA or higher in final two years of high school; and (3) either placement in top 10% of graduating high school class; or early intervention program participation.

Women's Issues Gain Momentum

The need to explore the changing roles of women, both in and out of academic the academic arena, is becoming evident on Longwood's campus with the emergence of a program of women's studies and the creation of committees and organizations concentrating on the needs of women.

Though Longwood's student population is over 60% female, there are relatively few women in upper-level administrative positions on campus. In the past, Longwood has had a female president, vice president, dean of students, as well as various deans of schools, but currently Longwood's upper-level female administrators consist only of Phyllis Mable, Vice President of Student Affairs, Dr. Vera Williams, Acting Dean of the School of Graduate and Continuing Studies, and Dr. Wells, Chair of the Natural Sciences department. This is an extremely low ratio of female administrators compared to female students.

One major step in the awareness of women's issues is the newly created women's studies minor. Resulting from the hard work of Brenda Cross and Sarah Young of the Learning Center, as well as a number of other dedicated faculty members and administrators, the women's studies minor was developed to address a growing need for a more well-rounded curriculum. This minor will be satisfied by the participants taking classes in a number of departments, such as English, History, and Sociology.

The program is will do much to further cooperation between the various departments on campus and promises to be one of the most exciting courses of study on campus.

Also contributing the awareness of the needs and concerns of women, as well as those of minority groups on campus, is the Committee on Gender and Minority Affairs. Headed by Brenda Cross, Longwood's Director of Minority Affairs, this group evaluates Longwood's policy on a number of issues affecting women. One project that the committee has been working on recently has been the revamping of the college's policy on sexual harassment. This policy, however, has not yet been finalized.

Students are also becoming active in focusing women's issues. Longwood students are are currently working to establish a local chapter of the National Organization for Women (N.O.W.). Erin McCay, one of the the chief student organizers, has high hopes for the group.

"We hope to have students, administrators, and professors, as well as local residents, involved in making a Longwood N.O.W. chapter an active force in the area," says McCay, a second-year English/Sociology major.

"There are some issues that have been ignored for too long," she continued. A N.O.W. interest meeting will be taking place during the first few weeks of school.

Students and college employees of both Longwood and Hampden-Sydney are in the process of planning for the Tenth Annual Conference of the Virginia Women's Studies Association, which will be held November 6 and 7, 1992 at both schools. The theme of the conference will be "Changing Images of Women in the Arts and in Higher Education." Highlights of the event will be open discussion of the backlash against feminism, a student panel evaluating the changing roles of women, and various workshops and speakers.

Anti-Abortion Views Gain More Precedence in G.O.P. Platform

As the 1992 presidential election draws near, women's issues are garnering more and more attention on national, state, and local levels. The most volatile of these issues is abortion.

The Democratic Party espoused a pro-choice view without controversy, but the turmoil in the Republican Party has been widespread and potentially damaging.

After a great deal of heated debate, the G.O.P. platform committee made a push for a constitutional amendment forbidding abortion a plank in the official campaign platform.

However, a growing number of Republicans, both men and women, feel that such a strict view does not fully represent the ideology of all members of the Republican Party. Calling themselves The National Coalition of Republicans for Choice, these individuals hoped for, and were led to believe they would get, what the late party chairman Lee Atwater called his "big tent" theory of political ideology: a platform that would allow for a variety of views.

One of the leaders of the pro-choice Republican movement is Ann Stone. Stone, owner of a direct mail company in Alexandria, Virginia, and staunch supporter of other Republican views, before the G.O.P. platform committee meeting assured the public that her group could and would make choice a plank in the Republican platform.

Their hopes were crushed by the strict conservative leaning of the official platform. Phyllis Schlafly, a vocal advocate of the anti-abortion movement, calls the platform a "total victory ... none of this litmus test, big tent garbage."

George Bush himself revealed what sounds remarkably like a pro-choice stance when asked what he would do if his granddaughter desired to have an abortion. He answered as any caring father or grandfather would: he would encourage her not to have an abortion, but would support whatever decision she would make.

Vice President Dan Quayle responded in a similar manner when asked the same question, this time in respect to his thirteen year old daughter Corrine.

Even Barbara Bush, long suspected as having pro-choice leanings, finally went public with her views. According to Mrs. Bush, abortion is a "personal choice, personal thing."

In fact, seemingly the only supporter of a completely anti-abortion stance among the first two families is the Vice-President's wife, Marilyn Quayle. She insisted that her daughter would carry the child to term if she became pregnant.

Student Awareness Must Begin At College

We at the Rotunda would like to take this opportunity to welcome all students, both new and returning, back to Longwood. Though there are always some people here during the summer, it is only with the presence of the entire student body that the college regains its vitality.

The upcoming year presents a variety of challenges to be faced by members of the Longwood community. Students strive to maintain a high grade point average and balance a number of often conflicting pressures.

When one enters college, however, concentration only on immediate personal needs and desires is not only selfish, but detrimental to our community on a number of levels. The greatest challenge faced by most college students is learning to simply become aware.
The student should, indeed must, become aware of his or her surroundings, as well as their impact on those surroundings.

No longer is the student held safe in a world created by loving, caring family, sheltered from life's unpleasantnesses. Instead, he or she is thrust into an arena wherein decisions must be made on a variety of subjects, ranging from a choosing to have safe sex, to voting in elections, to recycling an aluminum can.

Unfortunately, most students are not aware of the impact of their actions. Or if they have some inkling of the problems we face today, for the most part they simply decide that "well, I'm only one person. It won't make a difference."

Anyone who believes that is a fool. Our world, on environmental, social, economic, and political levels, is held together by the most tenuous of bonds. One person can, and often does, make a difference, be it in a positive or negative way.

College must be a place where, if it has not ocurred already, the individual learns of his or her importance in the greater scheme of things. Longwood has an obligation to make its students aware of the repercussions of their actions. A failure to do so is irresponsible and unforgivable.

All opinions expressed in unsigned editorials represent tha majority opinion of the editorial board. They do not necessarily represent the opinion of Longwood College, its students, staff, administration, or trustees.

Lankford's New Colors Unpopular With Some

Editor, Rotunda:

All in all, I really like Longwood. The new dorm looks great and Blackwell seems to be coming along fine too. But there is one area on campus that looks terrible!

That area is the Student Union Building. What color-blind fool picked the new colors of the Gold Room? And what is it going to be called? The Maroon Room? Its horrible.

And why doesn't some art major go berserk with a paint brush and remove those awful paintings in the the bowling alley and in the stairwell? Can any art major walk through that visual nightmare without getting migraines? I can't.

Personally, I am not too keen on orange and green scalene triangles.

I say lets just paint the whole building white and be done with it. Or if whoever is in charge feels the need to be crazy, I could even go for cream-colored. But please, no more green or orange or maroon.

More Student Involvement Needed At Longwood

Editor, Rotunda:

Why didn't Longwood College have a yearbook last year? College is the most important time of a person's life. Friends that will last for the rest if your life are found here, as well as classes and other activities.

I wish that more students cared enough about life at Longwood to make it enjoyable for the rest of us. Don't complain about how boring it is living in a residence hall, join a sorority, fraternity or other organization. There is so much to do here, that I have no sympathy for people who complain all the time. They just need to find their group or shut up and stop ruining it for the rest of us.

Going back to the yearbook, I can only say that we had better have one next year. I want a yearbook for my senior year!

FROM THE LEFT

By Trey Piersall

Educators are constantly looking for new ways to improve and expand the quality and scope of the learning process. The most recent advancement in this search is to require students to become involved in their community.

Last month, Maryland made it mandatory that students complete a certain number of community service hours before becoming eligible for graduation from high school. Longwood College jumped on the bandwagon by requiring all first year students to complete three hours of community service through their Longwood Seminar class.

In terms of creating a setting for a well-rounded education, I cannot think of a better opportunity than community service. Through community service, students not only gain experience in their major or other area of expertise, but also provide a much needed service to the community.

I frequently hear students complain that they have no way to change their environment. Well, here is the answer, volunteer. By working in your community without compensation, students can make a change in their world.

I have also heard the saying "You can't get a job without experience and you can't get experience without a job." Volunteering also enables a student to gain valuable experience (not to mention beef up a resume) in any field of interest.

What could be better for an education major than tutoring some of the area youth? A student who is not sure which field they wish to pursue can make a better decision if they have experience in one or more area. These are just a couple of examples of the many benefits the volunteering in the community can afford.

The opportunities for community service in Prince Edward County alone are vast. Students can get experience in almost every field of study offered at Longwood, as well as some that are not a course option. Longwood College is doubtless enhanced by offering community service experience to its students, but it is the student's responsibility to take advantage of these opportunities.

My only concern is that community service has always been synonymous with volunteering. Volunteering provides not only the above benefits, but also an incredible feeling of contribution. If students are forced to give, then they may be robbed of the true pleasure of altruism.

We cannot fight Mother Nature, and it is the nature of high school and college students in a state of breaking away and individuating to resist. It would be a great loss if some students were turned off to community service because they were supplied with [illegible]

By the same token, [illegible] them they will not need to be forced. In the past, reinforcement for positive behavior has been much more successful than external pressure.

Community service should be strongly encouraged and rewarded, but not required. As John LaCarré said, "desk is a limited place from which to view the world," but it is equally true that the student must have his or her own reasons for wanting to get out from behind the desk and into that world.

A DISPATCH FROM SPY MAGAZINE

Rhetorical Questions Answered

Is the pope Catholic?

Yes, and catholic with a small c as well. In the fifteenth century, John XXIII was accused of keeping his brother's wife as a mistress, of having at least 200 other women, including many nuns—and of being an atheist. No wonder they took his number away (it wasn't until more than 500 years later that it was reassigned to the beloved, roly-poly John XXIII of the early 1960s).

But he was nevertheless Catholic, as were all the variously misbehaving popes, even the French ones, even the Antipope pretenders, and even the ones named Conon, St. Fabian, St. Hyginus, St. Simplicius and St. Dionysius.

How many roads must a man walk down before you call him a man?

It depends. Leaving a West 76th Street apartment recently and heading north, I got to 99th Street before anyone said, "Joints and bags, man," so the answer would be one, for 23 blocks. A stroll some time ago on just one block in the Bronx near the campus of the all-female College of Mount Saint Vincent caused a woman to exclaim, "Oh God, it's a man."

Why did the chicken cross the road?

Right, it's been answered, but the response "to get to the other side" has never seemed satisfactory. Chickens are stupid, not known for complex motives. Perhaps that's the very point—a suggestion that behavioral motivations are every bit as obvious as they appear.

Suzanne Mittenthal, a sociologist who is technical editor of Poultry Science magazine, notes that recent studies have equated human neurology with that of pigeons, which are also poultry. "It's not so absurd to ask why people cross the road," she says, perhaps a little defensively. "It's my experience that poultry don't get very far. They see wildlife and they get fascinated. And then they get hit by cars."

Karl Nestor, Poultry Science's editor in chief, says, "Chickens are just curious animals. The fact that the road happened to be there was incidental." Which, of course, suggests a whole new ontological question, concerning chickens and eggs.

Longwood Students Dig History

Field School Makes The Grade

By Erin McCay

What do long hours in the blazing sun, hard work, and poor living conditions equal? Fun, if you were a participant in the 1992 summer field school.

Dr. James Jordan's archaeological field school has, since its creation seven years ago, become one of the most popular classes at Longwood. It is also one of the most important.

In addition to being a tool for teaching, as most classes are, the field school also contributes something significant and concrete to our whole community: a better understanding of the history of our area.

Every pottery shard found at a prehistoric Indian site and every brick bat unearthed near a colonial shed adds one more piece to the puzzle of our past.

Dr. Jordan concentrates his students' efforts on three sites. Two of the sites, Morris Field Archeological Site (a 7000 year-old Indian base camp) and the Monahassanough Archeological Site (a 6000 year-old gardening village) are considered prehistoric, and the third site, Millbrook Plantation, is historic.

Millbrook Plantation is a particularly interesting dig, in that it was the home of the daughter of Thomas Jefferson, Maria. Indeed, according to oral tradition, one of the buildings on the property was said to have been designed by President Jefferson himself.

It is Dr. Jordan himself, though, who is the greatest attraction to his summer school. Armed only with his trowel, span, and fantastic personality, Jordan persuades otherwise haphazard students to concentrate on the painstaking work that is archaeology.

As he has noted in the past, using proper archaeological techniques, it takes several hundred college students and seven summers to create a hole that could be gouged out by a backhoe in one day.

It is the painstaking removal of artifacts and recording of information that makes the process go so slowly. Students crouch in plotted squares, gently scraping away layer after layer of human existence and taking care to note every indication of mankind's presence.

Though most of the thousands of artifacts recovered at the field school sites have been items such as pottery shards, nails, spalls (chips made during the creation of stone tools), and other shreds of mundania, it is the rare intact artifact that is the most exciting to recover.

But no matter how small the artifact found, each item discovered and properly catalogued adds a little more to our understanding of the past.

Leaders Find A Home In Resource Center

Longwood leaders will have access to greater facilities and better materials with the creation of the Leadership Resource Center.

Located in the Lankford Student Union behind the information desk, the Resource Center will offer almost everything a campus organization needs to create better publicity, as well as a more informed membership.

The Resource Center is funded by the Student Government Association, who channeled nine thousand dollars of student activity fees into the project. This money has been used to refurbish the Resource Center room, purchase publicity-making materials (such as banner paper, markers, pens, scissors, tape, staplers, etc.), computers, a printer, a button-maker, a laminator, a telephone, and resource books and videos.

According to Zav Dadabhoy, Student Development Educator in charge of leadership and the major force behind the creation of the Center, the Resource Center is vital to improving the quality of leadership on campus.

"Without the materials, we just can't get our message across," said one campus leader.

With the easier availability of macintosh computers and a laser printer, the output of most organizations should improve dramatically. All computers in the Center will be equipped with state-of-the-art graphics and word processing programs.

The Leadership Resource Center can be used by all students who are working on projects relating to leadership activities on campus, such as creating publicity for an event, making promotional buttons for a group, typing an agenda and minutes for a meeting, or using the video resources to present a workshop on leadership techniques.

Administered by the Student Government Association, the Center will be open on the same schedule as the Lankford Student Union. Use of materials such as paper and markers will be free, but a nominal fee may be charged for the use of laminating and button-making supplies to cover the cost of those supplies.

The Center will continue to add more resources as the year goes on, such as the current plan to make available to students an optical scanner.

Clapton's "Unplugged" Is Acoustic Heaven

Eric Clapton is without a doubt the guitar genius of our time. And fortunately for Clapton fans, he has proved it yet again with his stunning new album, recorded from his appearance on "MTV Unplugged."

Unlike so many performers of today, Clapton doesn't bury his talent, or lack thereof, under a hodgepodge of electronic squeals and mixes.

Instead, his work hearkens back to more basic, moving rhythms and lyrics. Especially intriguing is his new rendition of the Derek and the Dominoes classic "Layla."

His new version of this classic rock staple is destined to become a classic in itself, as are many of the other tracks on this CD.

This album is a must for anyone who wants to hear music as it was intended to be.

Other performers from "Unplugged" who have created companion albums are Paul McCartney, with his limited edition "Unplugged- The Official Bootleg," and Mariah Carey.

Wayne's World Childish, But Entertaining

Wayne's World*-starring Mike Meyers, Dana Carvey, Tia Carrerra, and Rob Lowe. Directed by Penelope Spheeris.

Yes, yes, I'll admit it. I wholeheartedly enjoyed Wayne's World. I realize that, as a mature college student, I should be above such juvenile entertainment, but face it — its funny! There are no artistic pretences (or plot, for that matter), just a couple of very funny people doing what they do best.

For the 25 of you out there who have not yet seen this move or SNL skit, this is the basic premise. Wayne and Garth (Meyers and Carvey) are the hosts and creators of a public-access show produced in Wayne's basement. The rights to their show are purchased by a slick television producer named Benjamin (Lowe) who brutally exploits our heroes.

Interwoven with this is Wayne's tumultuous relationship with Tia Carrerra's character, and Garth's obsession with a blond mystery woman (Donna Dixon).

It takes Wayne and Garth almost the entire movie to realize Benjamin's intentions, and the film culminates in the boys' revenge over Benjamin and each winning his respective dream woman.

Dana Carvey outshines Meyers, the nominal star of Wayne's World, with his portrayal of the pathologically shy Garth. The few scenes in which he is spotlighted shine. You can almost forget that he is about twenty years older than the character he is playing. Especially humorous is a dream sequence in which he approaches the woman he has worshipped from afar to the strains of Jimi Hendrix.

It is understandable that many didn't want to spend five dollars on this movie at a theater, but it is well worth a two dollar video rental if you are looking for a movie to watch without using one ounce of mental effort. *1/2

DINING OUT

Taco Bell Express Comes to Longwood College

Lancer Cafe Makes A Run For The Border

Forget the new library, the changes to Blackwell Dining Hall, and the new dorm. The most eagerly awaited bit of construction at Longwood College will be finished in a few days and Taco Bell will finally be here.

According to Bob Young, manager of Lancer Cafe, there will be a number of changes to what we now know as Lancer Cafe. The most important change in many students' minds is the addition of a Taco Bell Express.

Taco Bell Express will not offer as wide a range of items as a regular Taco Bell, but will include some of the more popular and inexpensive items, such as tacos, soft tacos, and burritos.

Pizza Hut Personal Pan Pizzas will be available on the right-hand section of Lancer Cafe, and the left-hand section, which will house the Taco Bell Express, deli, grill, and frozen yogurt, will now be known as Lancer Express.

Fortunately for Longwood students, one section of the menu to be removed is the less than mediocre Mexican farefeatured last year. Though Taco Bell is by no stretch of the imagination gourmet food, it is one of the best fast food chains around, offering inexpensive, tasty, and fairly healthy meals quickly. And, according to Young, "students are brand-conscious, and we want to meet those needs."

Lancer Cafe will also still offer some other very popular items, such as Ben and Jerry's ice cream in pints(try the Chunky Monkey, Cherry Garcia, Wild Maine Blueberry, or the New York Super Fudge Chunk) and Ben and Jerry's Peace Pops, all of which are absolutely sinful, and equally delicious. An added benefit of buying the Peace Pops is that a percentage of the sale price goes to charitable causes.

And the Cafewill still stock pretzels, chips, popcorn, soft drinks, and everything else a starving college student could need for fulfilling those late-evening cravings.

Lancer Cafe will be open Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays from 11:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m.; Tuesdays and Thursdays from 11:00 a.m. to 12:00 a.m.; Saturdays from 12:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m.; and Sundays from 12:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. Lancer Cafe and Lancer Express will be open for business on Thursday, August 27.

Longwood Athlete Plays In '92 Olympiad

By BRENDA CAMBELL-HARRIS and ERIN MCCAY

Does success always change a person? Not necessarily. Take, for example, Michael Tucker. Tucker has been given the two most prestigious honors that any athlete can dream of: the opportunity to represent his country in the Olympic Games, and the chance to play a professional sport. But sitting across from us he could have been any college athlete — shy about his achievements, and optimistic about the future, but realizing that "[everything] could be taken away as quick as it had begun."

Tucker was a member of the United State's 1992 Olympic baseball team, playing second base for the team and helping it place fourth in the international competition.

His future is equally bright. Tucker has been drafted by the Kansas City Royals and plans on beginning training as soon as possible, temporarily putting on hold his college education.

Tucker met with two members of the Rotunda staff on August 18, 1992 to discuss his achievements and plans.

Rotunda: Do you think that you would be back on the Longwood team?

Tucker: No, my collegiate career is over. But everything else is open. I can come back and play another sport. I only qualify as a professional in baseball.

R: How does Buddy Balding (Longwood's baseball coach) feel about your career choices? I know he went to Barcelona to see you.

T: He's happy for me. He always knew I might have to leave early and he wished me the best.

R: Did he ever try and talk you out of leaving Longwood?

"I'm just keeping (it) in perspective"

T: No.

R: How do you like Kansas City?

T: I haven't been out there yet. I haven't had the time. They wanted me to come up before I left, but I had to go to the [Olympic] trials so I left in June. They wanted me to go to Kansas City after I got back, but I told them that I wanted to take a break and relax. They said it was fine. I don't know when I will see Kansas City.

R: So you'll be living in Kansas City soon?

T: I'll probably be starting in one of the minor league organizations. It's possible that I may begin with the major league ball club, but more likely I'll be in the minor league club in Appleton, Wisconsin or in Memphis

R: Do you plan to go back to college?

T: Right now I am working on trying to come back next semester, and that will probably be the only time I will be back because in Spring there is spring training. This fall it will be possible that I will be coming back. I'm not sure that I will or not. I'm working on it.

R: What is the difference between minor and major league clubs?

T: Minor league is like the farm system...that's were they get all the good players from. If you do well in the minor league, you get a shot at the major league club.

R: (Laughing) And a big increase in pay!

T: Yeah! A nice little increase in pay.

R: Is it usual to go directly to the major league?

T: No. Very seldom does someone go directly into the majors. Some pitchers, if they don't need that much practice, could go directly to the major leagues. A [college] position player normally would go through the minors, even though it may be brief.

R: How strong is Kansas City's team?

T: They're O.K. They're having a few problems here and there, but overall they are a pretty good ball club.

R: Are you happy to be chosen by the Royals?

T: Yes.

R: Would you have liked to play for any other team?

T: If I had a choice, it would probably be Baltimore. It's closer to home.

R: But maybe not for long. Couldn't Baltimore decide that they want you?

T: Yes, that's when the trade rules come in. But now I'm playing for Kansas City and I'm happy with that situation.

R: Have you practiced with Kansas City yet?

T: No.

R: How did they choose the Olympic Team? You played so many games...why did it take so long?

T: It took so long because you really couldn't judge a person from one game. That's basically why it took so long. They were trying to get an overall feel of the player.

R: How did you feel when you were over there representing the states?

T: It was like you were in a dream...like "you're in the Olympics!" Later on, after everything started up, it was just another game. Before the first pitch of the first game you know you are in the Olympics, but after that, when you are out there, you just focus on the game. When its over, you're like "Well, its over. We've just played our first Olympic game." It's one of those situations where before and after you think about it, but while it's going on you think of the game.

R: Has being chosen for the Olympics and drafted by Kansas changed you any? Are you more confident?

T: No, not really. I've always been confident in most things I've done, because the whole time I played baseball in high school and college the real goal I had set was to be drafted and play professional baseball. The Olympics came up all of a sudden. I had no expectations to play in the Olympics, and when the opportunity came up, it took me by surprise. It wasn't one of the goals I had thought about. As things went on, I realized I could play for the Olympic team. It became something I wanted to do, and I got the chance.

R: How did you feel when you found out that you had been selected as a member of the Olympic team?

T: Its hard to say... it was more of a surprise than anything else.

R: Did you ever feel that you had been selected before the decision was final?

T: There were rumors floating around that it was possible that I was on the team, but nothing definite.

R: When you found out you had been chosen, could you believe it at first?

T: It was as if loads of pressure had been taken off me. At times I had other things come up, like Kansas City wondering which way I was going. I told them I wanted to be on the Olympic team. They said it was O.K., but as soon as the Olympiads were over I should try playing baseball for them.

R: Did you meet any interesting people in Barcelona, like the Dream Team?

T: I met everybody on the Dream Team except for Michael Jordan.

R: Did you get any autographs?

T: (Laughing) No, but I got this hat from Charles Barkley (pointing to his white and red baseball cap bearing the Dream Team's logo). It was one of those situations where they are Olympic athletes and you are an Olympic athlete. They paid their respects by coming to the Olympic Village to see the rest of the teams. Charles Barkley, on the other hand, would come in for routine visits almost every day. Jordan stayed in the hotel. He never came out because of his situation. He is such a basketball superstar, he would have been mobbed by fans. The same way that Carl Lewis was mobbed in the opening ceremony. Carl Lewis came in with us and had his picture taken with a fan. When people saw who he was, he was mobbed by people asking for pictures and autographs. Carl had to run over to the Dream Team, because they had all the security. It was pretty strange seeing people from many different countries chasing Carl Lewis down the track! Anyone standing around Carl Lewis was bumped away (by fans). It was quite crazy.

R: How did the practice schedule at Barcelona differ from other practice sessions?

T: I practiced every day up until we started playing. On days off, between games, we practiced. But it was basically the same as any other practice session. You practice for about and hour and a half, go over defensive drills and hitting cut-offs.

R: When the team was beaten by Cuba, how did they feel?

T: We had played Cuba six times in exhibition games. The first time we played them, we just wanted to go out and have fun. We played a hard game and good game, but it just didn't come together. The second time we played Cuba, we really wanted to beat them. We sort of forced the issue, and did things that we really shouldn't have done and, that hurt us. We took that harder than the first game.

R: Where did the U.S. eventually finish?

T: We came in fourth.

R: At one point there was some rivalry between the U.S. and Japan,

"It was like you were in a dream" wasn't there?

T: No, the only real rivalry we had was against Cuba. Cuba, for some reason, didn't like us too much. With most teams, we just went out and played, but with Cuba, we really wanted to beat them. I think we played overall a better game than any other team (that played) against Cuba. The other teams were afraid of Cuba because they were classified as the best amateur team in the world. When it came down to it, they were no better than we were, but they had more experience in playing. Most of the guys had been playing together for ten years, but this was our first time playing together. The mystique of playing Cuba took its toll against the other teams.

R: Was there any rivalry between players off-field?

T: Any rivalry we had, was on the field. On the field was where you showed who was the best. Off the field, If we saw some of the members of Cuba's team in the Olympic Village, we would joke with them.

R: What do you feel were the team's weakest points?

T: The only thing I could say is that we were only together for five weeks. You try and put a team together in five weeks. You're not going to have that chemistry you really need to have. We had a little chemistry going. I think that if we had had more time, maybe two or three months (together) beforehand, it could have been different.

R: What was your most memorable moment from the Games?

T: I would say that my most memorable experience was the opening ceremony. We were the runner going around the track and he ran up to the platform. As he got came up and we expected him to go up the steps and light the torch in the usual fashion. But he lit the arrow from the torch, so we figured he was going to shoot it up into the air. He aimed for the torch, and at that point everybody thought "no, he's not going to," but he did! He lit the torch from there. The arrow went right over the torch, and I guess the gas was on so when the arrow came by it just flamed up. It's something you'd never forget.

R: Did you get tired of all the hype over the Dream Team?

T: It seemed to be just the Dream Team, the Dream Team, the Dream Team, but you know how good they are. I guess they deserved it because this will probably be the first and last time they had a situation where they brought in professional players. In 1996 it will probably go back to college players.

R: Do you agree with the decision to let professionals play? What do you envision the Olympics being?

T: The Olympics should be for amateur sports. But you have countries like Cuba and Japan who won't let their players play professionally. Cuba has four or five guys who could easily play major league ball, and Japan deliberately keeps players out two years before the Olympics, so they will be eligible to play. (America) can only say "well, our best players are professional."

R: Did anyone ask you for an autograph?

T: Yes, I signed at the baseball venue constantly. Since I've been back to the State, I have also signed some.

R: What did it feel like the first time you signed an autograph?

T: It was O.K. I didn't think too much about it.

R: Do your friends treat you any differently?

T: No, basically about the same.

R: What do you see happening in the future?

T: Right now playing for Kansas City.

R: Taking it one day at a time.

T: I'm just keeping (it) in perspective. As good as I am, I still could end [illegible]. Everyone [illegible] Olympic baseball [illegible].

Procedures And Absenteeism Plague Senate

SGA Besieged By Conflicts

By Erin C. McCay
Editor in Chief

Longwood's Student Government Association Senate abounds with all the dynamics of a nursery school play-ground. There are over-aggressive bullies, sullen pouters (the "I'm going to take my ball and go home"-mentality), and complacent followers.

An unfortunate repercussion of this status-quo is the increased number of problems in even the simplest of clerical and procedural processes.

One basic problem faced by the SGA is perpetual absenteeism. This is a chronic problem among members of the SGA Senate. Last semester, for example, five members of the Senate were dismissed from that body due to multiple unexcused absences.

The Senators dismissed from that body were removed under the rules outlined in an official absenteeism policy adopted by the Senate in February 1992. That policy was in effect until September 6, 1992.

According to those guidelines, no senator could miss more than three (or twenty-five percent) of all SGA meetings, office hours, and functions in a semester.

Under this policy, a number of Senators are in danger of, or technically have already, lost their senatorial positions. Among those is SGA Vice President Amanda Janney.

Janney has attended none of the SGA meetings and functions thus far this semester, totaling five unexcused absences (two General Meetings, two Executive Council Meetings, one SGA retreat) and has exceeded the three-absence minimum set by the entire Senate.

When asked about the status of Vice President Janney, Darrell Wells responded that "no, I have not received any excuses." He went on to say "However, on her behalf I will say that she is carrying a very heavy course load as well as work study."

When pressed, Wells declared that he was not aware of any extenuating circumstances for Janney's absences, and that the matter would be brought up in Executive Council.

Another topic discussed was the allocation of student activity fee monies to the Virginian, Longwood's yearbook. The Virginian was disbanded last year due to lack of interest among the student body, but has recently been restarted.

Julie Lindsey, SGA Publicity Chair and Virginian staff member, championed that publication in regard to the disbursement of activity fee funds. She asked for $11,000.00 on behalf of that organization, which requested only $3,000.00 in 1990-91, and $7,000.00 in 1991-92.

A motion was made by SGA Senator John Fox that $11,000.00 be allocated to the Virginian. Seven Senators voted for the motion, five against. Though according to the SGA Constitution this motion passed, President Wells, as chair, declared that it did not pass and the matter was inexplicably, and if SGA was supposed to be following parliamentary procedure, incorrectly dropped.

President Wells was questioned by the Rotunda as to the matter of a conflict of interest in regard to Ms. Lindsey and the Virginian. He responded by saying "Yes, it was a conflict of interest." He defended her actions, however, remarking "I feel that her intentions were good."

He went further to comment that "I accept all responsibility for letting things progress to far. [The issue] should not have been addressed without the presence of the Treasurer and the Virginian's financial records."

When asked about the correct procedure for the allocation of student activity fees after the normal processing time has passed, Wells said "to my knowledge there has been no precedent set for such a procedure. I don't believe this matter should go before the Appeals Board [for Student Activity Fees], but should go before a special Student Activity Fee Committee meeting." The Student Activity Fee Committee includes Ms. Lindsey.

When asked how he felt about an allocation to the Virginian, he tersely replied "I voted against the motion."

Wells also remarked that "I'm not familiar enough with what it takes to fund such a publication, [but] it does seem extreme to me."

Lindsey, however, feels that she acted correctly. "I don't think there was a conflict of interest because I was speaking on the principle of the matter. I would have done the same for any organization."

She went on to say that the Virginian did everything requested of them by Darrell Wells and John Boroweic, and that she had understood that the matter would have been resolved at the September 6 meeting.

Lindsey also maintains that she acted correctly throughout the meeting until "everyone lost their professionalism at the end."

After the meeting, President Wells was asked if other organizations on campus had been made aware of the surplus of student activity fees (approximately $20,000.00) available. Wells admitted that that was not the case.

Another area of concern is the matter of an automated teller machine (ATM) to be located in the student union. The possibility of installing an ATM has been under discussion since last semester, but no action has been taken at all during this semester.

The Physical Environment Committee, co-chaired by Kevin Boland and Julie Lindsey, learned prior to the first SGA General Meeting that Richard Hurley, Vice President for Business Affairs, had not yet send out bids for the contract, but as of this time have yet to meet with in regard to this matter.

Another major crisis in the eyes of the Senate was an attempt to designate a day for the SGA Senators to wear the new personalized shirts that had been ordered by the Senate. The matter was under discussion for fifteen minutes, and was not resolved.

More disturbing, however, is the fact that thirty-five shirts were ordered by the Senate (there are only twenty-five senators) at a cost of approximately $25.00 apiece, totaling approximately $875.00. There is no record of any vote by either the SGA Senate or Executive Council for allocating funds to be spent in this manner.

Another major concern is about those appointed to the SGA Senate seats made vacant by the dismissal of habitually absent senators was Mark Tueting. Last semester Tueting was representative of the Judicial Board, but was dismissed due to his large number of unexcused absences. He has been reappointed to the Senate, this time as Corresponding Secretary. The office of Corresponding Secretary entitles Tueting to be a member of SGA's Executive Council.

The purpose of the Executive Council is to set the agenda and policies of the SGA, as well as decide on such matters as the validity of absence excuses. The Executive Council can also, when it is unfeasible to convene the entire Senate, act for, and make decisions on behalf of, the SGA Senate as a whole.

On the whole, the SGA Senate is greatly hampered by the lack of concentration by many of its members on the greater priorities.

Hurricane Forces Schools to Close

(CPS) - Universities and colleges throughout South Florida assessed damage and tried to determine when schools could open after Hurricane Andrew took a deadly swipe across the state Aug. 24.

The hurricane smashed into Miami at 5:01 a.m. EDT, roared through the souther part of the state and exited into the Gulf of Mexico south of Naples, Fla.

The storm left at least 15 people dead - 12 in Florida and three in the Bahamas - heavily damaged buildings, flooded roads and left thousands of evacuees wondering when they could return home. Estimates of property damage are in the billions of dollars.

Hurricane Andrew also forced the closure of many schools in the region.

Classes at the University of Miami, which was to open its fall term Aug. 24, were canceled, a security officer said. There was little damage to the campus, in suburban Coral Gables, but school officials hadn't had a chance to assess the damage.

The hurricane's eye crossed just south of Miami with wind gust of up to 164 mph. At least 400,000 people were without power. A spokesman at Florida International University, in south Miami, said the school was without power and he did not know when it would be restored, but an official with Florida Power & Light said some areas could be without electricity for weeks.

Trees were uprooted and windows were knocked out at Florida International University, but there were no reported injuries.

Officials at Florida International were attempting to get to a north Miami campus to see how much damage it received. "We haven't heard a thing from that school, " a security officer said.

State official indicated the heaviest damage was concentrated south of Miami from Coral Gables to the farm community of Homestead near the Florida Keys.

Miami-Dade Community College, which is one of Florida's largest schools, received heavy damage at its downtown campus, a school security official said. There were no reported injuries. School was supposed to open Wednesday, but school administrators hadn't been able to get to the campus to inspect the damage.

The downtown campus, which is comprised of three buildings - the tallest is nine stories, the shortest is three - suffered blown-out windows, downed trees and light poles that were knocked over. Security gates throughout the campus were knocked off of tracks, and the area was without electricity. The three-story building received the most damage, an official said.

PERSPECTIVES

EDITORIAL

SGA Actions Bear Scrutiny

When they set their sights on something they feel is really important, our SGA Senators show an incredible amount of zeal. Damn the torpedos and full speed ahead!

Unfortunately, SGA's perception of what is and is not important is so skewed its dizzying.

Most student government associations around the country are grappling with such issues as defending student rights, acting as a watchdog in fiscal matters, striving to maintain high academic standards in the institution, and providing for the needs of the student body.

Even our paltry SGA manages to produce a great deal of discussion on issues such as these.

But we do mean just talk. For all of the lofty ideals and grand schemes of the present group of quasi-senators, there has been no real increase in the quality of student life at Longwood.

For example, they have been batting around the idea of installing a new automated teller machine since last semester. Not much progress was being made when the members of the committee in charge of this little play-project found out that there was a process by which Rick Hurley, Vice President for Business Affairs, must collect bids from companies interested in doing the construction involved.

At least three weeks has passed since they shared this information with the Senate, and at every meeting we hear that they are "planning to speak to Rick next week." And as we all know, next week never gets here. At least not for our SGA.

But one project grabbed the attention of our brave leaders, and they took immediate action.

Did their actions enrich the lifestyles of Longwood students in any way? Did it create a better level of academic standards perhaps? You decide.

Some members of our Senate, with about one week's delay time, first decided to, and then proceeded to order some really jazzy blue and white shirts for all of the SGA Senators, plus a few spares. Isn't that keen? Let's see... 35 shirts (there are 25 senators) at about $25.00 a pop comes to almost $900.00.

Don't you all feel better knowing that our spirited leaders will all be able to dress the same way once a week? Now you can rest easy.

But think about it for a minute. $900.00. One wonders how much of that could have gone towards defraying the cost of, say, and ATM machine. And unfortunately, the process by which they paid for these shirts is questionable.

Rather than going through proper requisition procedures (it is so difficult to get all those pesky senators together at one time for a vote, so we won't even bother), a few of our more fashion-conscious reps decided that they wanted shirts, and they wanted them NOW! So forget about getting Senate approval to spend almost $900.00. It's just great to have a worthwhile goal you can believe in! And Rick Hurley still has that open hour on his calendar next week.

And (get this, such a deal!), you need not be present to win one of their lovely prizes. Hell, Amanda Janney, SGA's erstwhile Vice President, has not managed to find time in her busy schedule to attend one of the five SGA functions or meetings that have taken place thus far. But no one mentions this at the meetings. Three is the limit for unexcused absences, but when you know the right people it can make your life a lot easier. Besides, her title looks so good on a resume.

And if you have some pet projects, get on the Senate! Julie Lindsey, our Publicity Chair, also happens to be a member of the Virginian's staff. Bear in mind that the Virginian is a fine publication that should receive money from SGA.

However, not every group has its own advocate with a senatorial vote guaranteed. And it's very easy (as those who ordered the shirts can attest to) to push pet projects through. Why bother with the same procedures other groups had to go through...you have a pet senator.

Amazingly, the phrase "conflict of interest" never passed anyone's lips. How much more obvious does it get? Especially where a large sum of money is concerned (The Virginian requested $11,000.00). I saw no senators rallying to the cause of the Gyre or Judicial Board. In fact, unless you had an "in" on the Senate, you probably didn't even know there was money left to be allocated. SGA sure didn't bother to make that fact known.

SGA needs to take a long hard look at some of the shenanigans that have been going on unchecked. The rest of us sure are.

By Trey Piersall

I am as sick and tired of the abortion argument as everyone else, but I can't resist a chance to express my opinion just one more time.

Last month, a journalist asked Vice President Dan Quayle what he would do if his thirteen year-old daughter wanted to have an abortion. Apparently Dan got confused about whether he should answer the question from the "family values" platform or the "anti-abortion" platform. Mr. Quayle (tired of feeling constantly confused) opted to answer the question honestly.

Quayle stated that he would urge his daughter not to have the abortion, but that if she went through with it he would support her.

Our illustrious Vice President takes a lot of grief from a lot of people, but this time I think that he was answering from the heart.

What father wouldn't answer exactly the same way?

There is just one problem Danny, your answer is the very essence of the pro-choice movement, and the Republican Party stands on a strict anti-abortion platform (though not unanimously).

Another journalist asked George Bush the same question in reference to his grandaughter, and the President echoed Quayle's response. I guess what makes this so fascinating to me is that we seem to be caught.

No one considers abortion to be a pleasant and delightful procedure, but we cannot justify totally prohibiting it. Whether abortion is right or wrong will never be decided by a vote. The only thing that can be decided through democracy is what people consider to be acceptable and unacceptable.

It is unacceptable for one member of society to impose his or her moral dogma onto another. A woman's right to choose what happens to her own body must be preserved. And now we know that way down deep, George and Dan agree.

Alcohol Abusers Burn in Hell?

Editor, Rotunda:

The Rotunda has so well documented the problems caused by alcohol on our college campuses. Since women are more sensitive to this drug than men, it is very often the cause of sexual abuse and diseases. Dr. Knisley, of the University of North Carolina, has documented the damage done to the brain cells - even in small amounts. Birth defects from drinking mothers (and fathers) are common. The New England Journal of Medicine (1987) reported that three drinks a week increased [the chances of getting] breast cancer 40% to 50%.

The list goes on and on. The study showing that a small amount of alcohol reduces heart disease by 26% omitted women and also did not claim that anyone lived longer - considering that alcohol damages every other part of the anatomy.

So the local supermarket where I went this week welcomed back students with "mountains of beer" festooned with t-shirts (etc.) shouting "PARTY WITH THE BEAST."

Which brings us to the Book of Books in Proverbs 20:1, "Wine is a mocker...and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Of course, there are some who do not abuse alcohol, and may even profit from moderate use, even though at least one on four American families is badly hurt by this drug. (Gallup Poll)

Referring to the anti-Christ, St. John says in the book of Revelation 15:2, "I saw...them who had gotten victory over the beast...having the harps of God...and they sang...'Great and mighty are the works, Lord God almighty.' "

To all college students, I hope you will not let alcohol abuse here keep you from that great party "without the beast" in the world to come.

Yearbook Editor Responds

Editor, Rotunda:

I am writing in response to the letter in the last issue of the paper concerning the yearbook, or the lack there of one last year. Currently, I am trying my hardest to revive the Virginian for the 1992-1993 school year.

The reason there was no yearbook last year was that not enough people took the time to order one. Why would anyone put two semesters' worth of work in for only fifty out of three-thousand students to enjoy. Its not worth it.

Right now we have a little over one hundred orders for the upcoming yearbook. As long as they keep coming in, we will have a book. I guarantee it. Please get your orders in.

But as long as I have your attention, I will ask for your help. Please have your yearbook picture taken (October 8-9, in the Virginia Room), send us your favorite candid shots (we promise to use as many as possible), and order your book.

You can contact me at 395-3113 for more information.

Thank you.

Casey Decision Pro-Choice Setback

Court Limits Women's Freedom

By Kirsten Shaw

Is it really a surprise that abortion rights advocates are unhappy with the Supreme Court's recent abortion decision? True, its ruling on Planned Parenthood v. Casey reaffirmed the theoretical right of a woman to terminate a pregnancy, as guaranteed by its 1973 Roe v. Wade ruling. For that, pro-choice activists were expected to be grateful.

But by upholding the so-called "reasonable restrictions" of the Pennsylvania law, ostensibly seeking political middle ground, the high court has succeeded only in compromising women's fundamental rights.

Conservative America has long hailed the American tradition of freedom - independence of speech and thought and the liberty to pursue happiness and enjoy freedom from state intrusion. Government, it is held, has a limited role in the life of the individual.

Apparently these freedoms do not extend to women. Freedom does not seem to include the right to make decisions about one's own body.

The court's Casey ruling reasserts a woman's fundamental right to make reproductive decisions and yet simultaneously nullifies that right by insisting that states are free to enact laws that restrict it - laws that suggest that women aren't capable of making important decisions, that they will enter into these decisions lightly without "proper" state enforced controls.

States are given the freedom to choose to restrict abortion rights while women are denied the same freedom. Contrary to the tradition so valued by Americans, the state thus assumes the role of moral deliberator that has historically been left to the individual. Does the state pretend to possess a loftier understanding of when abortion is moral and when it is immoral?

By withdrawing from the individual the right to examine moral considerations and make a choice, as it did in the Casey ruling, the Supreme Court has revealed that it suffers a conventional bias. Some Americans still do not believe that women are capable of acting as moral agents. They think that, just as in the past they were controlled by patriarchal husbands, women still need patriarchs - in this case the court - to make really "big" decisions.

The court and many legislators evidently feel that a 24-hour "cooling-off" period will help a women regain her senses and shake off the emotional feebleness so characteristic of her sex. But does anyone really believe that without such a state mandate, a women will not pause to consider her options? Presumably the court feels that 24 hours and a state-contrived lecture by her doctor will set her straight.

Given that the state does not trust individuals to weigh moral and practical alternatives in such a situation, it is astounding that it allows individuals to bring children into the world without restriction!

By leaving it to a majority of mostly male lawmakers in each state to decide to restrict a woman's constitutional right to control her reproduction, the court has created the probability that most will legislate discrimination. By encouraging state regulation, the court has demonstrated that while Roe v. Wade supposedly guarantees a woman's constitutional right to make reproductive decisions, all women are not equal.

When, due to burdensome restrictions, it becomes virtually impossible to get an abortion in one state, a wealthy, mobile woman is still free to cross state, even national boundaries to exercise her rights.

Poor women are not, and neither are women with abusive husbands or parents. Their rights are effectively denied them by practical circumstance and, more importantly, by the failure of their state government to preserve the rights of all its citizens, regardless of their race, religion, sex, or socioeconomic condition.

While women in the rest of the developed world enjoy virtually unhindered access to abortion and autonomy over their reproductive lives, the rights of American women remain at the whim of the court which doubts even their ability to behave as rational adults.

The Republican Party's 1992 platform agenda clearly expresses its intent to seek a constitutional amendment to ban legal abortion altogether. And while the Democratic platform supports choice, individual members of Congress supply mostly lip service in the fight to preserve abortion rights.

If American women want to ensure that their reproductive rights are restored and safeguarded once and for all, they will have to announce that decision on November 3 by electing pro-choice candidates, including many more women, to the House, Senate, and to the White House.

If the current Congress is not afraid to approve anti-choice appointments to the Supreme Court, and the president is not afraid to trumpet his opposition to women's reproductive rights, perhaps a Congress truly representative of the American people would not be afraid to safeguard a right the overwhelming majority of Americans want protected.

Tammy Hood Aids Disaster Victims

By Tara Confalone

With the help of Longwood students, ARA workers, administrators, local stores, and local families, Tammy Hood headed up a campaign to help those victims affected by Hurricane Andrew, the major storm that nearly destroyed parts of southern Florida, Texas, and Louisiana a few weeks ago.

Tammy first began the lengthy process by calling the American Red Cross to discover whether or not they were accepting donations for the hurricane's victims.

When she learned that they were only accepting monetary donations, she called various groups in the community and discovered that Bedford Middle School was accepting various types of donations.

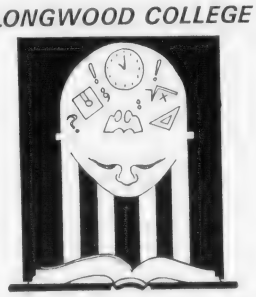
At this point her mission began. Trucks were scheduled to leave Bedford on Friday, September 4, giving Tammy only a week and a half to collect donations.

She began by collecting boxes from local businesses and by passing out fliers. Tammy placed boxes in all the residence halls, dining hall, and commuter lounge. She plastered the campus with her fliers, and requested that desk aides make announcements on her behalf regularly.

She even spent over two hours at the local Winn Dixie, distributing more fliers to store patrons and collecting items donated by the shoppers.

Tammy, a senior Social Work major, seems to have kindness in her blood. When asked "why are you doing this?" her simple reply was "I just like helping people."

Although she has neglected her school work, Tammy says it has been worth it and not too strenuous a task.



She collected the donations daily and separated them in her dorm room. All in all, she has received enough items to fill one container or baby items, one box of hygiene products, six boxes of food, one box of first aid supplies, and ten bags of clothing.

Tammy left late last week to deliver her collected goods to Bedford Middle School so they could be included on the truck to Florida.

For taking the initiative and showing that it is possible to truly do for others, Tammy Hood is the Rotunda's "Longwood Student of the Month."

The Rotunda will use this space monthly to recognize those students who truly contribute something to the world around us.

LONGWOOD COLLEGE

LEARNING CENTER

The staff of the Learning Center welcomes everyone to the Fall 1992 semester. The theme for this year is "A Vote For Tomorrow." The idea that your choices define your future goes far beyond this year's election's. Your daily choices, both in and out of the classroom, shape your experience and your future. The Learning Center offers the following opportunities to enrich your academic experience and expand your opportunities.

The Writing Lab: Staff members will work with students with topics ranging from grammar to paper organization. Word processing software training is also available.

Peer Tutoring: Peer tutors are available for every course offered at Longwood and will work with students for no charge. 85% of those students working with peer tutors earned a "C" or better in their course.

Learning Strategies Workshops: A regular schedule of workshops are offered in time management, test taking, note taking, text reading strategies, etc. Students may follow up these and similar topics by scheduling appointments at the Learning Center. The Learning Center will also work with faculty and students in tailoring workshops for specific areas of interest and courses of study.

Disability Support Services Students with special needs may request additional support services and assistance in arranging reasonable accomodations by contacting the Coordinator of Services for Individuals with Disabilities. Call 395-2391 and schedule an appointment with Scott Lissner.

For any service, contact the Learning Center (395-2391) or stop in to make an appointment. The Learning Center is located in the Graham Building (next to campus police).

WLCX Deserves More Respect

By Chris Young

The Longwood College radio station, WLCX - 90.1 FM, began transmitting its watts of sound last Monday with a number of new compact discs and new problems.

"The station [has] received over a hundred compact discs," said one of the radio's newest personalities, known only as "Ralph", when broadcasting to the college. "[This increases] the collection to anywhere from five hundred to one thousand discs."

The board members voted on a format last semester, and the result was that the radio station would play alternative/progressive music from 9:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. The new additions to the music library will more than likely make this format change a permanent one.

The controversy that seems to surround WLCX has once again surfaced. The members of the drama department have always disliked both the radio station and the DJ's who work there. The reasoning behind this hatred is that the heads of the drama department and a majority of the drama students agree that the space currently occupied by WLCX, located in the upper floor of Jarman Auditorium, could be used to expand drama department space.

There have been attempts to move the station to an unused room on campus, but nothing has come of this suggestion.

Now there is a new problem affecting the station. Someone unknown to the WLCX board members, or anyone else for that matter, has attempted to restrict the station's broadcasting. WLCX must now be off the air and out of Jarman by midnight. In essence, this means that WLCX must go off the air at 11:30 P.M. in order to abide by this new, interfering curfew.

One WLCX board member commented, "I was supposed to receive a letter notifying us of and explaining the new restriction, but I have not yet received [any such letter]. [But] the midnight curfew is already in effect, and I can't understand why [it] has been levied on us when the letter [has not been received]."

This person has a valid point. Why should the DJ's at the station be forced to conform to these restrictions when they are given no explanation of the policy, especially when the station previously had twenty-four hours a day of programming.

This problem could be solved if the college would take money that the Longwood Bookstore robs from the students, and more from the other areas where the college overcharges students to make or build a place for the radio station. This would resolve the on-going conflict between the disc jockeys and the drama department.

The college may say that they do not have the funds, but they more than likely do not want to give up the funds to build a place for the station.

Maybe the college is too lazy to find a place, or the administrators do not think this is a big enough problem to concern themselves with at this time. The fact of the matter is that if the college would let the station expand, it could reach places outside of the campus and Farmville.

This could get businesses to advertise on the station and bring in money for the college.

This problem is here to stay and it cannot be ignored. Something must be done to resolve this situation, or the station will be shut down. Maybe that is the kind of "Free Publicity" Longwood wants.

Popular Hypnotist Doesn't Put Audience To Sleep

Deluca Mesmerizes Audience

By Staff Writer

"Howdy, y'all" was the way he greeted the audience. This is not the introduction one would expect from a man who was voted "Entertainer of the Year" among colleges and universities, as well as who was featured in People Magazine.

But this is no ordinary man. This is Tom Deluca, the man who had Jarman Auditorium filled to capacity on August 27.

Sponsored by Lancer Productions, Mr. Deluca gave a two-part performance that had every member of the audience convulsing with laughter. Both his opening mind-reading act, which gave a few Longwood students the opportunity to look brilliant (how did he do those tricks?), and his hypnotism session were earmarked by his intelligence and wit.

Deluca showed his finesse when he dealt with his first volunteer, who was obviously uneasy with being in the spotlight. "Don't be nervous," he reassured her, "they are not laughing with you." He then asked the student to pull a card from the deck without looking at it, and then place it face down in the deck.

Deluca then called upon another member of the audience to come to the stage and draw a picture of the card chosen by the first volunteer. When it was revealed that the second student had drawn the correct card, the audience roared with laughter, a trend which continued throughout the rest of Deluca's enthralling performance.

It was the second part of the show, however, that was the most enjoyable. Deluca assured the audience they would be able to "see how terrific imaginations are when they are unrestrained."

After a brief intermission, the stage was set with a semi-circle of chairs and Deluca spoke quietly with student "spotters," whose job it was to prevent students from falling out of their chairs when "put under," and in the case of any extremes, to prevent the hypnotized volunteers from totally humiliating themselves.

Twenty-seven individuals were chosen from the screaming audience members. Deluca asked the audience for a few minutes of silence, and proceeded to put almost all of the volunteers to sleep. Those who did not go under immediately were quietly escorted from the stage by the student helpers. They were the lucky ones.

Those who remained were then told that they were fishing from a tropical beach. Students frantically reeled in their struggling, albeit invisible, catches.

After a few moments, Deluca began to mention the temperature. Those students on stage became visibly uncomfortable as he told them that the temperature was rising steadily. One male volunteer took his shirt off at 100 degrees. When a female participant began to remove her clothes (she was restrained by the student spotters) however, Deluca turned down the heat.

Throughout the rest of his performance, Mr Deluca regressed the students back to childhood (moving some of them to tears when he told them that Oscar the Grouch had been shot by Wonder Woman), made them flex and pose for a "body building contest", and even made some forget their names.

One particularly funny sequence was when Deluca told some of the volunteers that he was invisible. He then proceeded to place a chair in front of them, and kicked and moved it about. The students obviously could not see him, and some attempted to leave the stage in fear of the "miraculously" moving chair.

The show finished with a Las Vegas dance review. Deluca told a number of the students that when they heard the phrase "Las Vegas," they would rush to stage and beginning dancing wildly. As soon as he said those words, the volunteers stampeded to the stage and began to gyrate to the strains of Michael Jackson's "Bad."

Deluca then brought the volunteers out of their trances one by one, until there was one lone student left strutting wildly at the edge of the stage. Those whom he awakened first were dazed and unbelieving, but when they saw the remaining students still under Deluca's spell, they began to realize what they had spent the last hour doing.

Tom Deluca, through his wit and energy, gave Longwood College one of the most enjoyable performances in recent memory.

A DISPATCH FROM SPY MAGAZINE

Don't Believe Everything You Read

In the course of a 73.5-year lifetime, the average American will spend...

- 7 years in the bathroom
- 5 years waiting in line
- 2 years trying to make phone calls to people who aren't home
- 1 year searching for misplaced objects
- 8 months opening junk mail

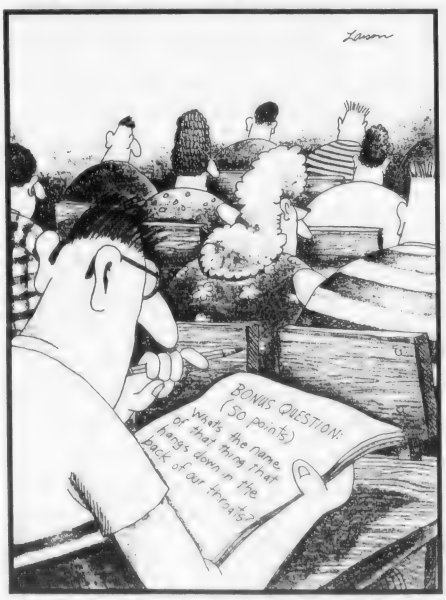
These factoids, from a press release sent out by the Pittsburgh consulting firm of Fortino & Associates, have been reprinted wherever column space is filled with neat little stories about the wacky world we live in—which is to say, just about everywhere.



Former presidential spokesman Larry Speakes once said, "If you tell the same story five times, it's true." So this story must be really true—after all, it passed unscathed through the fact-checking procedures of so many reputable news organizations. Surely so many writers and editors couldn't have reported information that was the result of someone's having to hit the wrong button on his calculator! After a grueling four minutes with our own calculator, we broke the alleged "lifetime" statistics down into their daily quotas. According to Fortino's data, we learned, the average American spends, every day,

- 2 hours 20 minutes in the bathroom
- 1 hour 40 minutes waiting in line
- 40 minutes trying to phone people who aren't home
- 20 minutes searching for misplaced objects
- 15 minutes opening junk mail

This was news. Has anyone outside of Eastern Europe actually waited in line 1 hour and 40 minutes a day, seven days a week, from infancy until death? After all, the Stones don't go on tour that often. And does everyone really spend 40 minutes a day trying to telephone people who aren't home, when such calls are necessarily awfully short?

Don't forget, these are supposed to be average figures. So if you think you're spending only 30 minutes a day in the bathroom, then someone else must be spending 3 or 4 hours in there.

ENTERTAINMENT

The Comedy Circuit

By Jeff Schnaufer
Special Correspondent

Here's The Fall Lineup

(CPS) - For some people, college is definitely a laughing matter.

Every fall, dozens of stand-up comedians head to the nation's college campuses with dreams of becoming the next Eddie Murphy or Jay Leno. Talent agents compete for the biggest crowds of students at the best universities, helping their comedians make a name for themselves.

"It's a great fan base," says William Morris agent Marco Cuadros, who books comedians at college campuses. "(Students are) the trend-setters. You sell the right guys to them, and you've got an audience."

Who are the top comedians?

According to Lou Ross, director of Convention and Member Services with the National Association for Campus Activities (NACA), there are "tons" of comedians on the college circuit, including a few celebrities. However, if you're smart, you'll want to catch the rising stars, before it cost too much to see them.

A good bet is to check out NACA's 1991-92 nominees for best campus comedian of the year: Craig Anton, Bertice Berry, Carrot Top, Walli Collins, ventriloquist Dan Horn, A.J. Jamal, Bradley Lowery and Rondell Sheridan.

What can you expect to hear from their routines?

"For the most part, people are looking for fresh things," Ross said. Students are tired of comedians who attack ethnic groups or "a woman who comes out and does PMS jokes."

New comedy trends include prop humor, as performed by comedian Carrot Top, and clean humor, as perfected by comedian Craig Anton.

"Everybody used to tell dirty jokes and people used to laugh at the shock value," says Bob Kramer, head of the Kramer Agency that represents Anton. "Now, people go up and make you laugh because they're funny, not because of the shock value."

Students also like to hear jokes they can relate to. "It's very regional," Ross said. "You have people who perform will in New Jersey who may not go over will in New Mexico or Arizona or Alabama."

That's why NACA's nominees for best comedian do so well on campus, Ross said. Their humor is universal. Some, like Rondell Sheridan, know how to directly relate to students.

"Rondell talks a lot about college life and living with roommates," said Lori Sanchez, director of comedy programs for Admire Presentations.

Here are campus calendar dates for the eight NACA top-comic nominees:

Craig Anton: Miami-Dade Community College, Sept. 9; Valley City State University (North Dakota), Sept. 28; University of North Carolina-Charlotte, Oct. 21; D'Youville College (New York), Dec. 2.

Bertice Berry: University of Akron in Ohio, Sept. 9; Princeton University, Oct. 13; University of Central Arkansas, Nov. 3.

Carrot Top: University of Michigan-Dearborn, Sept. 9; Florida State University, Sept. 25; Cleveland State University, Nov. 2; Ashland University in Ohio, Nov. 5; Morehead State University in Kentucky, Nov. 16.

Walli Collins: West Virginia State College, Oct. 8; University of Hartford in Connecticut, Oct. 23.

Dan Horn: Lake Forest College in Illinois, Sept. 18; University of Wisconsin-Green Bay, Sept. 22; St. Olaf College in Minnesota, Oct. 3; Worchester Polytechnic Institute in Massachusetts, Nov. 5; Niagara University in New York, Nov. 12.

A.J. Jamal: Florida International University, Sept. 10; University of Cincinnati, Sept. 22; Southwest Texas State University, Oct. 21; James Madison University, Oct. 29; St. Edwards College in Texas, Nov. 14.

Brad Lowery: Lafayette College in Pennsylvania, Sept. 26; North Central College in Illinois, Nov. 13; Carthage College in Wisconsin, Nov 14.

Rondell Sheridan: Northern Michigan University, Sept. 30; University of Wisconsin-Superior, Oct. 1; Upper Iowa University, Oct. 7.

An Ode to Freshmen

By Trey Piersall

By now you are probably learning what college life is all about. You have no doubt gone through many emotions during your first two weeks of college: fear, anger, confusion, joy, and pride to name just a few.

I have looked back over my past six years of college and come up with a few hints which I hope will make the rest of the transition a pleasant one.

1. It might help if you find someone who has more experience at college life than you and get them to show you the ropes. You should choose this person very carefully though. The drunk who made it all the way up the hill, while you gave up trying should not be your first choice.

2. There is no cure for a hangover. The person who told you that spaghetti with maple syrup and skim milk would make you feel better was lying (as well as sadistic).

3. If you are still trying to figure out which day of the week begins with "R", then you should probably try out for the Longwood football team.

4. If you are able to find the library open as well as discover a librarian who is actually on duty then you should play the lottery more often. The gods obviously smile upon you.

5. No bartender is ever going to believe that you were born in 1950, so you can return your mother's driver's license.

6. Those ladies in the cafeteria are never, ever in a good mood. It does not matter how polite you are, you would have more luck getting two portions of the main course at a Republican banquet than in the Longwood cafeteria.

7. There is a little-known phenomenon which causes your roommate to turn into Satan, eat the contents of your care package, and invite everyone at the party back to your room at 3 a.m. Don't get upset, just take out a personal in the Rotunda about his/her venereal disease.

I don't know whether these tips will be helpful to you. If they are, then you have absolutely no business being in college.

Greg Brady—"(GASP) Mom's favorite vase!"
Bobby Brady—"She always says, 'Don't play ball in the house'!"

A Very Brady Mr. College

ASK MR. COLLEGE

Mr. College answers questions about The Brady Bunch!

Q. Dear Mr. College: What happened to Mike's first wife, and Carol's first husband?—Baffled

A. Dear Baffled: Good question. Mike shot and killed his first wife in a domestic dispute. He claimed it was self-defense, and was never charged with any crime. Carol, on the other hand, was never even married. In fact, Marsha, Jan and Cindy each have a different biological father.

Q. Dear Mr. College: In the episode where Peter breaks Mom's favorite vase, do you feel that Peter should have received all the blame? Shouldn't Bobby and Greg share the responsibility?—Tormented

A. Dear Tormented: This may come as a bit of a shock, but I DO NOT believe that ANY of the Brady boys were responsible. After studying the angle and trajectory of the basketball I have developed what I call the "Second Ball" theory. I maintain that Cindy broke the vase with a softball thrown from the shag carpet area of the living room, or, "the shaggy knoll". Peter was nothing but... well... a patsy.

Q. Dear Mr. College: Who's your favorite Brady?—Curious

A. Dear Curious: Oh no you don't! I DO have a favorite Brady, but as one of the countries foremost Bradyists I feel it would be irresponsible of me to answer that. Sorry.

Q. Dear Mr. College: Who would win in a fight, Greg Brady, or Keith Partridge?—Often Wonder

A. Dear Often: No contest. Though they never actually fought, I have simulated this match on computer many times. There's no question that Greg could kick Keith's ass. Even if Danny got Reuben to help.

HEY! Got a question or comment for Mr. College?

Hockey Team Shows Promise

By Staff Writer

If there are two things third-year coach Sandy Bridgeman can count on from her 1992 field hockey team, they have to be experience and leadership.

It is easy to see why she is so enthusiastic and positive for this year's season.

One reason why is that eight seniors are returning to the line-up for a team that finished 3-9-1 last year. Bridgeman feels that with the experience generated by these eight, they will set a definite path of leadership for the others to follow.

Led by 1992 co-captains Tonia Harris and Meyon Puent, the attitude is positive and the confidence is high as the Lancers prepare to face what may be the best schedule as far as challenges are concerned.

This year's schedule sees the Lancers facing Division I, II, and III schools. With the addition of a divisional NCAA Championship being held for the first time, there is an added incentive to place well in their division.

Another factor Bridgeman feels is a plus to the schedule is the 3 game road-trip to Pennsylvania over fall break. And with 6 home games this year, the team's morale will be riding high for their home-field advantage.

Although this year's team is top-heavy with seniors, underclassmen players will definitely contribute to the success of the season.

Seniors Maria Dougherty, Denise Hanley, Tonia Harris, Kim-Marie Hasson, Susie Lindsay, Trisha McCormick, Meyon Puetn, and Jenny Weubker will provide the leadership for the others to follow.

And Bridgeman expects the others to contribute in their own way. Juniors Nora Lamb, Missy Moran and Anita Warford, and sophomores Ashley Bolen, Sara Hogan, Clara Maulding, and Mari Willen all have collegiate experience and will be looked upon for leadership.

The team also has it share of freshman, Bridget Bryson, Allison Dunleavy, Amy Hegna, Toni Lewis, and walk-ons Terris Lewis, Jean Rehbein, and Tiffany Tignor.

If there is one thing that might create a slight disturbance in the beginning of the season, it is the new system Bridgeman has incorporated for the season. Despite the technical changes, the team is confident that they can grasp the concepts and is eager to try it out in the games.

When asked about the key points for a successful season, Bridgeman concentrated on the fact that all players must contribute in their own way for the best of the team.

Another aspect Bridgeman feels is important is taking advantage of scoring opportunities, or at least getting a shot off of every offensive possession. Bridgeman takes care not to under-rate the defense, because, as they all witnessed last year, it may only take one goal to lose a game.

High Hopes For Team's Future

Soccer Team Falls To Elon

By Brenda Campbell-Harris
Sports Editor

After playing their first game against Elon, in Northern Carolina, the Longwood soccer team succumbed to defeat, losing 4-0.

The soccer team began their heavy practice schedule two days before everyone came back to college. Their days began with two 2 hour practice sessions, and ended in the evenings with a grueling session of conditioning. During the semester, they practice from 4pm until 6 pm, almost every day.

On the way to the match, there was a lot of talking, joking, and a few soccer videos. According to Taylor Tucker, a freshman from Virginia Beach, no one felt exhausted when they arrived. In fact, the exact opposite happened. They were very excited, and quite eager to get out on the field.

Even though the game was comprised of a lot of kick and runs, rather than passes, the team felt that it was only their first game, and they look forward to a bright future.

Longwood Tradition Continues

SENIORS CAPPED

By Kelly Vanderherchen
Staff Writer

The Class of 1993 was officially introduced as seniors at the Convocation on September 10 at 1 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. The seniors were capped in front of their family, friends, and peers in the ceremony to recogonize their status.

Dr. O. Carolyn Wells, Chief Faculty Marshal of the ceremony, called to order the Capping following the Processional of the seniors.

Before the ceremony got under hand, seniors had previously chosen underclass students, named Little Brothers or Sisters, to decorate their tassles and caps.

These decorations included symbols from the various sororities, fraternities, clubs, and other organizations in which the seniors belong.

The seniors met their Little Brother or Sister in the Sunken Garden are between the Colannades and Tabb to line up for the Processional. As they marched to the auditorium, the brothers and sisters followed behind their senior and carried the decorated motorboard.

As the Longwood Brass Ensemble played Intrada In March, the Marshals and the carriers of the banners preceded down the aisle, followed by the seniors. The Little Brothers and Sisters sat behind their senior under the actual capping commenced in which they were to place the caps onto the heads of the seniors marking their senior status. Parents and friends waved as the seniors embarked down the aisle which would signify their class level.

Dr O. Carolyn Wells opened the ceremony by saying " It is my pleasure to declare the 1992-1993 convocation officially open" Her declaration was followed by placing of flags on the stage in salute of the ceremony.

Dr. Dorrill, President of Longwood College, welcomed the students, faculty, and guests to the 154th year of Convocation exercises at the college. He drew attention to the flags of the three schools of the college: the School of Liberal and Sciences, School of Business and Economics, and the School of Education and Human Services.

The carriers of the flags were selected by the schools of the college, based on their performance in the respective schools.

Dr. Dorrill introduced Wyndham B. Blanton, Jr., M.D., Rector, of the Board of Visitors, for his remarks on the importance of the board. He informed those assembled that the board consists of 11 visitors who "help to run the college".

According the Dr. Blanton, the Board has four specific function or objectives for the college. These include the seeing to the "objectives of the college" itself, coordinating the available "resources", facilitating the "election of the [college's] president, and "most importantly, [the actual] monitoring of the institution".

He announced that the citizens were appointed to their positions to "represent the commonwealth".

These citizens, in theory, represent the various communities of families and governments. He ended his oratory with a final wish to the students by saying "May you wear success well."

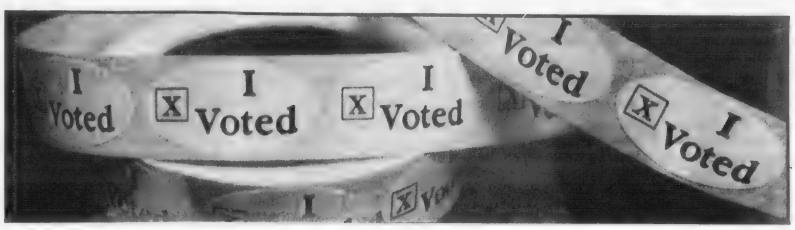
Following Dr. Blanton was Dr. Darryl G. Poole, Vice President for Academic Affairs. His address, "Beer Cans and Intellectual Epiphany" was delivered with a humorous tone, but with a serious message.

He emphasized the method of "how you think" versus " what you think." Dr. Poole pointed out that a beer can may indeed be just garbage, but this can could be a "recyclable beer can," and this garbage ought to be a "challenge."

The realization that this garbage can be recycled is an "epiphany, a comprehension by a sudden intuitive realization."

Dr. Poole softened his theme by saying " the world as we see it changes forever. Intellectual change can only reach so far." His focus attempted to show that the graduating class can not be expected to always have epiphanies.

It was also pointed out in his address that Longwood College, originally named Farmville Female Seminary, was an all-women's college that stressed only the courses of Greek, English, Latin, French, and piano



According to the older modes of thought, the disciplines of math and sciences "were to strenuous for the female mind." Only 13 years later were courses of this nature supplemented to the curriculum.

Dr. Blanton also referred to the main media, and observed that it is centered around printed words. He referred to these words a "tool for learning".

In this day and age, however, he said that the discovery of Guttenberg's printing press "has given way to Gilligan" in relation to the surge of television popularity.

He encouraged that students think about the world and the environment, and that while "you (the students) may not have an epiphany this year, we will likely grant you a diploma anyway"

Following the address and concluding the Convocation was the anticipated capping of the seniors. Dr. Dorrill said during the actual capping ceremony "I hereby declare that the seniors of 1993 are seniors and capped". At this time the Little Brothers and Sisters capped their seniors. Tara Confalone, senior class president, encouraged seniors to "take this last year and make your dreams come true".

Voter registration drives are the focus of a number of organizations on campus, just in time for Campaign '92.

Phi Kappa Tau Augments Fraternity System

New Fraternity Forming

By Tara Confalone
Staff Writer

Because many men felt that there was a need for another fraternity on campus, Steve Dealph, Greek Affairs Coordinator, raised the idea one day at an Interfraternity Council (IFC) meeting that a new fraternity be formed on campus.

The IFC then voted to set up an expansion committee made up of a representative form each fraternity, as well as Steve Dealph, Sue Saunders (then Dean of Students), and two sorority women.

After the committee was established, Bobby Williams, past Interfeaternity Council President, sent out information to all National Organizations, letting them know that Longwood was interested in expanding its fraternity system.

There were numerous responses, but only two fraternities were actually invited to come on campus and visit. These two were Phi Sigma Kappa and Phi Kappa Tau.

After meeting with both fraternities, the expansion committee unanimously selected Phi Kappa Tau to come to Longwood's campus. Since this day, Longwood has been working very hard with the National Organization to bring the new fraternity to Longwood.

Phi Kappa Tau, commonly known as Phi Tau, is a very strong national organization with over 68,000 members and chapters in 32 of the 50 states. Their colors are Harvard Red and Old Gold, and their flower is the Red Carnation.

The fraternity was founded on March 17, 1906, at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio. Miami University is known as the "Mother of Fraternities," because there were five greek organizations founded there, including Delta Zeta.

The Children's Heart Foundation was adopted by the men of Phi Kappa Tau as their National Philanthropy in 1985. Since this time, they have been raising money for educating the public about children's heart transplants.

According to the official information about the fraternity, Phi Kappa Tau is a democratic organization based on "Christian ideals and the innate worth of the individual." Christian ideals refer to ideas such as love, charity, brotherly kindness, honor, and fidelity. Phi Kappa Tau's foundation on Christian ideas does not mean that all members must believe in Christianity. The innate worth of the individual simply means that everyone has something to contribute to the organization. Phi Kappa Tau believes that there is a place for everyone.

Phi Kappa Tau is very interested in expanding at Longwood, and to help aid in the process Rob Reese, the Director of Expansion and New Chapter Development, has been sent to Longwood from the National Organization.

Mr. Reese has been on campus since Thursday of last week, and has been getting to know students by going to fraternity and sorority rush parties, attending the sorority rush information night, and basically just enjoying his days in "good ol' Farmville."

Starting today, however, Mr. Reese will be setting up tables down by the post office to attract the attention of all those individuals who might be interested in becoming a founding member of a chapter of Phi Kappa Tau. He will be interviewing all prospective members during the day, and during the evening he will have information sessions followed by socials. The activities will deal with team-building, educational programs, and other events.

The fraternities and sororities already on campus will help make the programs successful. Mr. Reese said, "The college has been very receptive, the most I have ever seen, and all the groups have been very responsive in asking if any help is needed."

On Friday, the Phi Kappa Tau's will be having their private associate member ceremony. Then at 10 p.m. in the ABC rooms, they will have a public introduction to the campus and the associate members will also be introduced.

It is important to know that the fraternity will be in colonization (forming) for approximately two years before it will completely fulfill all of the installation requirements to become a chapter. If one is given the opportunity to become an associate member, it is not until they have fulfilled all of these requirements that they will actually be initiated as a full-fledged brother of Phi Kappa Tau.

However, if one becomes an associate member that helps in the formation of the new chapter, he will still be initiated when the colony becomes a chapter and will still be asked to sign the charter of the chapter.

Being a founding father is a true fraternity experience, because in a sense you are given the opportunity to relive the founding experience. It makes one proud of the fraternity's history and it increases commitment.

According to Mr. Reese, "it is twice as hard to start a group then to keep it going."

Steve Dealph, who was a charter member of Lambda Chi Alpha at his college, believes that it is a "most unique opportunity."

Michael McFarlane, Interfraternity Council President, says, " I am looking forward to seeing it succeed. I helped on the expansion committee and I really want what's good for the guys."

Jennifer Moore, Panhellenic President, believes " Phi Kappa Tau will be a positive step for those who want to join, because they will mold the fraternity to their liking."

Lisa Lllwellyn, another Longwood student, also believes "it is good because they are expanding the Greek system."

Both Rob Reese and Steve Dealph contend that "Phi Kappa Tau will not take away from the existing pool of rushees. It will just make the pool bigger."

Many who have not joined a fraternity will probably think about the experience to be had by joining Phi Kappa Tau

Dorms Gain Alcohol-Free &Ecological Halls

By Jennie Fennell
Staff Writer

Along with many other changes at Longwood this year, two new interest halls have been added: The Longwood Alcohol-Free Floor (LAFF), and the Ecology Hall (Eco Hall).

LAFF, located on the second floor of South Tabb, has seventeen members. The chief student coordinator, Hans Paulsen, sites many reasons for the hall's existence. LAFF provides an alternative to those who want an alcohol-free environment, which cannot necessarily be guaranteed on other halls. The hall seeks to extend its ideas and activities to other areas of campus and hold periodic meetings for hall members.

The residents are attempting to contradict the stereotypical party scene by hosting alcohol-free parties. Some activities include hosting theme parties, such as a "BYO-whatever"— bowling ball, balloon, breakfast, bug — a take-off of what "BYOB" normally stands for. They have also suggested frozen turkey bowling, and other party-positive events. Anyone who does not drink alcohol is invited to these parties.

Some goals of the organization include hosting an Oktoberfest booth and inviting speakers to hall meetings. The group hopes to expand to other residence halls on campus. The members also work to promote National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week (October 26 - 30) and weekly meetings of the Adult Children of Alcoholics group.

The second new interest hall is Eco Hall, located on the first floor of Main Cunningham. The Hall President, Jen Reaves, states that the ultimate purpose of the hall is to promote environmental awareness by serving as an example to the rest of the college.

The twenty hall members are mostly upperclassmen, and all have a sincere interest in ecological preservation. Some of the goals of the group this semester are to host campus clean-ups, establish a magazine-exchange box in the lobbies of the halls, establish a newsletter, adopt a stream or a trail, and improve the environmental atmosphere at Longwood.

Some of the long term goals of Eco Hall are to develop programs throughout the dorms, work with the Physical Plant to expand the recycling program, and influence other students to participate in the hall-sponsored activities.

Besides being a special-interest group, the members of Eco Hall would like to be an action-group as well. The ideals of the hall are not meant to be confined to the floor alone, but extended throughout the college. The group hopes to add the Environmental Science courses listed in the handbook to the school's list of offered courses again. Anyone with a 2.0 average who has genuine interest in the environment is eligible to live on the Eco Hall

Longwood's Shiny Facade Hides Lack of Concern

New, But Still Unimproved

Longwood is really starting to look sharp.

Tons of money have been spent recently to build a new residence hall and library, as well as to refurbish the New Smoker and post office.

And someone did a fantastic job. Any prospective student (and that student's parents) could easily be impressed by the freshly painted walls, well-coordinated color schemes, and high-tech gadgets.

The question is, was this money spent wisely? The new dorm is neat, but do we really need the new fountain that is planned to go in front of it? The post office's increased space is definitely a plus, but why in the world didn't they get boxes with locks that actually open? And the New Smoker (or whatever they are going to call it), has all the glamour of a hotel lobby, but is about as useful as a flag is to a hen.

The most insulting waste of our money, however, is the library. Again, it will look swell in the pages of our college catalogue and on Longwood propaganda, but why in the hell didn't they design a functional building that could (now here's a novel concept) actually make all our books available to us without having to go through an intermediary? Yes boys and girls, there are actually libraries where you can browse through the collection and pick out what you need. If we had wanted an echo chamber, we would have asked for one.

By the wails heard eminating from the various administrative offices of Longwood, it is apparent that there is no money to be had for a variety of needs on campus. But somehow, what little money there is goes not to increasing the staff and services for the students. Instead, it goes for flashy schemes to lure more suckers, er, ah, we mean, students to Longwood.

Coming up in the "Beautify Longwood" campaign is a fetching brick wall that will encircle campus. One wonders how many sociology professors could be paid for a year with what will be spent on this little project.

Hey you budget-makers. Lets have a little more concentration on what students actually need, rather than cosmetic touch-ups. Form can be important, but to the college student who is footing the bill, function is key.

SGA Senator Responds

Editor, Rotunda:

I have been a member of the Senate for only one semester. I am sorry to say that I was not born with the senatorial know-how that you seem to think every member of SGA should have before they come to the senate. Have you ever heard of "on the job training?"

Well, its a wonderful new concept that means you learn as you go along. No one expects you to know everything when you first start to work. This concept says that we are not going to make you feel that you're an idiot for making a mistake; you are HUMAN!

You mention that most SGA's around the country are grappling with more important issues, such as defending students' rights, etc. We barely have attendance by non-senate members. How are we supposed to grapple such issues when we can't even get people to come to meetings and discuss problems around Longwood's campus? (sic)

Speaking of grappling with issues, the Rotunda felt it necessary to spend the front page and an editorial on SGA when we are in a presidential election year? (sic) Makes you wonder... I will say this to all incoming freshmen and students who are thinking of becoming interested in SGA, please don't let the microscopic scrutiny of this paper deter you from getting interested. It's hard work, I won't deny that, and you don't get any benefits. (Not even a shirt to show how proud you are, that actually cost less than $25.00)

I have one final comment, you seem knowledgeable about things you feel the SGA should already know, so why is it that you haven't made the announcement that you plan to run for the president of SGA? (sic) I'm sure that your moral obligation and your dedication to the interests of the students of Longwood will drive you to resign from your position of Editor/Spanish Inquisition Leader and lead us greedy, truant, nursery school members of SGA onto the road of perfect senatorial conduct, so that we may be mentioned in the history classes as the SGA that knew how to do everything right (on the first try!)

Sonja Bethea

Editor's Note: No member of the Editorial Board is planning to run for any SGA office.

Scholarship should be a major concern for all of Longwood's students.

Alpha Phi Alpha is no different in its struggle for academic excellence.

It raced up the ranks from dead last, all the way to the top in just one semester. The past spring semester each member worked diligently to uphift the name of Alpha and at the same time their G.P.A's.

The hard work paved off and every member received a 3.0 or better. But many others have worked just as hard, and Alpha Phi Alpha wished to acknowledge and reward just a few with the Micheal K. Herndon Scholarship.

Mike Herndon is the very popular R.E.C. of Frazer Residence Hall, and is a member and chapter advisor of A Phi A.

The first recipiant is Colette Laverne Hughes, a twenty-six year old Therapeutic Recreation major from Burmuda. She is a member of A.B.S. (Association of Black Student), a member of the Therapeutic Recreation Association and a member of the Longwood Honor Society.

The second is Angela Chriscelia Jones, a twenty-one year old Social Work major from South Hill, Virginia. She is an R.A., orientaion leader, minority mentor, and member of A.B.S. She is also a member of Phi Kappa Phi (Longwood's Honor Society), and Alpha Delta Mu, the social work fraternity.

The third and final recipiant is Tracey Laverne Fowlkes, a twenty-one-year old Elementary Ed major from Kenbridge, Va. She is a R.A., member of Giest and also a member of Kappa Delta Pi, the Education Honor Society.

"It is hoped that the number and amount of the scholarship can be increased for next semester," states treasurer Derick Richard. "Being so few in number and not well known by the average college student makes it extremely difficult to raise funds to such worthwhile functions as scholarships and aid to the less fortunate."

"It is not impossible," he continues. "We need the support of all our students and fleulty at the various fundraisers, such as dances, step-shows and other events."

Alpha Phi Alpha wishes to extend a warm welcome to the Phi Kappa Tau, fraternity and best wishes in the upcoming year.

And to it's brother fraternities, Phi Beta Sigma and Kappa Alpha Psi, congratulations in your strive for excellence and in placing second and third among fraternities.

Political Involvement Vital

By Jim Speckhart

Too often our generation, the twenty-something generation, has complained the most about issues that concern us, but fail to voice our opinion at the polls by voting.

This year is the twentieth anniversary of the ratification of the 26th amendment to the consitution, which gave 18-year-olds the right to vote.

According to the 1991 Statistical Abstract of the United States, only 30% (7.8 million of 26 million) of those eligible 18-25 year-olds actually vote!

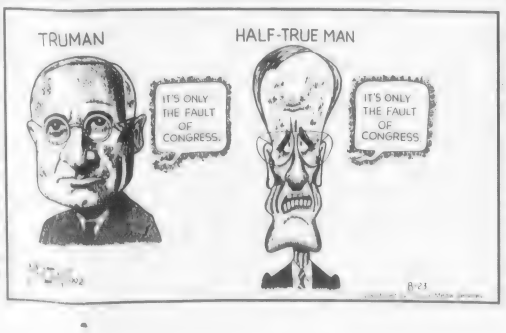
That statistic is particularly disheartening considering the vast majority of this age group is made up of college students trying to make brighter future for themselves.

This voter apathy makes me wonder whether or not there is a problem with the present political system. Our political system may not be the best, but as Jonathan Cohn, a 22-year-old journalist from Massachusetts suggests, ask any black South African, Tiananmen Square survivor or non-communist Russian citizen how they might like it, and I am sure they would rave about our democracy.

My point in all of this not to make our generation feel guilty, but to make us more aware of the importance of registering to vote, and then of voting responsibility.

There have been many nationwide campaigns by various organizations to get our group registered. One of the more well-known efforts has been MTV's "Rock to Vote" Campaign. Since its inception in 1990, co-founder Beverly Lund says, "Rock The Vote" has registered 750,000 young adults at rap, rock, and country music concerts. I think theyt tapped into an outlet to positively affect the MTV Generation.

One part of the entire voting process not normally stressed is familiarity with the issues. In the July 20, 1992 Newsweek, guest columnist Jonathan Cohn discussed the results of interviews he had conducted with young adults over several months. He discovered that we don't have political attitudes mainly because "we see no connection between our concerns and the ballot box." National politics and the subsequent issues have become irrelevant.



Many politician and political analysts think we are indifferent. On the contrary, polls indicate we are very concerned about many social issues like poverty, race relations, and the environment. As I indicated earlier, we must become informed about the issues and vote accordingly..

In order to further the democratic processon the Longwood College Campus, two important events have been planned. First there will be a Voter Registration & Absentee Ballot Application Table set up at the Involvement Fair Sept. 15 and 16. Second there will be a Voter Registration Drive on Saturday, Sept. 19th from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Commons Room between Curry and Frazer. Both the Voter Reg. Table and Voter Reg. Drive are being sponsored by the Legilative Affairs Committee of SGA of Longwood College. Refreshments will be provided.

I hope I have caused many of you to think about becoming a registered voter and participating in the electoral process.

For more information call me at 395-4078.

Thank You.

ENTERTAINMENT

MOVIES By Kelly Vanderherchen

Columbus sails in 1992? Yes, indeed. In the theatres, that is. Christopher Columbus: The Discovery hit the box office on August 21 and was fifth place among other movies its first weekend.

The movie stars Tom Selleck as King Ferdinand, Rachel Ward as Queen Isabella, Marlon Brando as Torquemada, the Grand Inquistor, and George Corraface as Columbus.

Directed by the same man that gave us a few of the James Bond movies, John Glen dramatizes the famous voyage of Columbus and his efforts to obtain the funds needed for this journey.

The movie introduces the audience to a young Columbus who studies maps and is especially fascinated by the idea that the world is indeed round.

It is here that Glen begins with the action of bandits trying to steal the map and the athletic Columbus protecting his prized possession.

Corraface's performance of Columbus focuses a great deal on his physical characteristics and not enough on the trials and tribulations that Columbus endured.

Another factor that worked against Corraface was the fact that he, a French actor, was trying to portray an Italian.

The suaveness and egotism of Corraface's nature came out a little too much in his acting. Corraface did not show enough emotion in his performance and did project intellect in comparison to the other actors' performances.

The movie then moves to King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella. Here Ward's portrayal of Isabella clearly outshine that of Selleck's King Ferdinand.

Ward gave power and authority to the character, but also she showed a feminine and soft side of the queen. Her long straight hair and flowing jewel-sequinned dress added to her beauty.

In Selleck's defense, his performance was comical, but clearly submissive to his on-screen wife.

As the story continues, after many failed attempts, the royal court agrees to help to finance the voyage under the condition that he, Columbus, be made Admiral of the Sea if he is successful in his voyage. The queen agrees, although the king merely seems weary.

The movie progresses to the actual voyage, and only slightly depicts the problem that Columbus had among his crew. The movie spent a great deal of time showing Columbus trying to find financing (almost an entire hour) for the journey and not enough time on his actual voyage.

The crew, in fact seems to dominate the voyage as well as the movie. Oliver Cotton, Glyn Grain, and Christopher Chaplin play some of Columbus's crew and seem to outshine Corraface's character, as did Ward and Selleck.

It is the crew's characters that show the heartache and frustration of being on the ships for such an extended amount of time. One of the characters described Columbus as having "the look of a man possessed." Dull would be a better adjective.

The scenery and the costumes, however, were extraordinary. The sight of the cliffs over the waters of Spain and the beaches of the West Indies added beauty to the movie.

The island on which Columbus landed was tropical paradise consisting of tall palm trees, clear water, and immaculate beaches.

The extras who portrayed the natives of the country also gave a realistic view to the island and it's inhabitants. If you can not find any other reason to go, the cinematography alone makes it worth it.

The costumes of both the men and women looked authentic to the time and gave a sense of the age which was centered around 1492. The royalty's attire consisted of layered robes with jewelry decorating the top layers.

The peasants and the crew wore more or less simpleton clothes and rags, but even these costumes did not look like they came out of someone's closet.

Another credit in the director's defense was that the movie gave a historical view of Columbus's voyage, although much was left to dramatization and speculation.

One scene in particular that I thought was interesting took place in a tavern where Columbus was trying to recruit men for his voyage. He demonstrated that the world was round by using a watermelon. He sectioned it into numerous pieces to illustrated the degrees of a globe. Whether Columbus actually did this, I don't know but it gave the movie an extra affect. I recommend that everyone should see the movie, whether you are interested in history or not. Any movie that leaves you thinking about its subject after it's over is worth spending the six dollars, and more importantly, the time spent seeing it. You may even learn something.

But it was Columbus who said before his voyage, "This voyage demands discipline and discipline we will have." It is, in this case, Corraface who needed the discipline.

Danzig III - How the Gods Kill

Glenn Danzig is back on the scene with his third solo album, in his ever-present attempt to distance himself from his legendary punk band, The Misfits. On this release, Danzig explores the fantasy of walking on the darker side of religion; and after spending a few years studying Christianity, who better to show you its faults. This album is the result of Danzig's scrutiny of religious ideas in the light of the real world.

The music on this record is full of skull-crushing melodies (check out Godless) which add to the doom and gloom mood of the tracks. The influences on this album range from Soundgarden to Muddy Waters. This album also spotlights blues (wow, as if it wasn't devil music before). The acoustic tracks, which on earlier albums were weak threads in Danzig's sonic tapestries, take on strength and power, especially the title track. There is a renewed passion here-one that helps bring out an emotional cry for more.

Lyrically this is not new territory for Danzig, but there seems to be more comittment to his growls and soulful lamenting. For new listeners a warning: this is not for the weak of spirit. Danzig takes great care in his craft and his knowledge is poetically presented in order to teach the masses what he has learned.

Tracks to give an ear to: Bodies, Left Hand Black, and Do You Wear the Mark. This album is worth a listen, and if you are afraid to go out and get it call up WLCX and ask them to play some of it. It is definitely worth the money, because this album is kicking.

PAGES by Teresita Edwards

Who comprises the white working-class of America and where did they come from?

Lillian Rubin's Worlds of Pain addresses these questions and documents the trials of this group. The first four chapters introduces white, working class Americans, their problems, lifestyles, and childhoods.

How could America not know about the white-working class? A class which makes up "...just under half of the total work force in America." In Chapter One, Rubin introduces these people as those who believed in the "American dream."

Lillian Rubin also states her reasons for writing this book. It becomes clear that she has written to explore these forgotten people's lives. She delves into how events "like the civil rights movement, the student movement, the antiwar movement, [and] the women's movement...have all shaped their lives"

Rubin also documents how the economy affects the white, working class family. In an effort to find out more about this group, she conducted 100 interviews, in which the spouses were interviewed separately.

In the chapter entitled "The Families," Rubin gives the reader an idea of what husband and wife Jim and MaryAnn Corbett's life is like.

The Corbetts are a "typical" working-class family. Rubin's first interview takes place with Mrs. Corbett. Rubin compares the neighborhoods and furnishings of the working class with those of the professional middle class.

Rubin observes how the "houses appear to be in better shape." She also notes there was "insufficient lighting for reading, but why waste money on things the family doesn't do?"

Rubin discloses that Mrs. Corbett feels she should not complain about her life. It is evident that Mrs. Corbett thinks "she should be satisfied with her life and if she isn't something is wrong with her."

Through her interview with Jim Corbett, the reader finds out that he is an iron worker who's had a number jobs. Rubin comments that "Jim is a lonely man." Mr. Corbett has a job, but because of layoffs he only made $12,000 last year."

Lillian Rubin uses interviews such as these to find out what cold statistics can't show-a humanistic representation of the middle class.

The childhood environments of these adults is the topic chapter three addresses. Some statistics are presented to give the reader an idea of how things were for these adults.

" Of the people Lillian Rubin met, 40 percent had at least one alcoholic parent... almost as many were children of divorce or desertion, and 10 percent spent part of their lives in institutions or foster homes."

This is by no means a pretty picture. One must consider the repercussions of living this type of life. What ideas do people who live under these conditions bring to marriage and family? Chapter Three, entitled "And How Did They Grow" takes a look at some of the emotions and ideas that working class children have compared to professional middle-class children.

After a look at the childhood of the working class, Rubin analyzes why these couples marry. The most obvious, but diluted answer is "we fell in love."

Pregnancy, financial support, and escape don't sound like good reasons to get married, but in white, working-class America, they are the real reasons behind the facade of fate and love.

Chapter Four illustrates reality for these people. One may ask what has happened to these people's quest for a better life? How can they be filled with such backward ideas about life, love, and marriage? The answer is one of many things-childhood or environment, or perhaps these are the fruits of an American dream deferred.

Theater Expert Clowns Around

By Teresita Edwards
Staff Writer

The Theater Department here at Longwood has been going through some changes lately. Among the set building and rehearsals for "Little Mary Sunshine," a visitor has come to Longwood's campus.

Ronlin Foreman has come to Longwood to conduct seminars and workshops. During his stay, which is over in a week, Foreman has taken over a number of classes and offered his expertise. He has taught the Introductory Acting Class, Children's Theater, Improvisational Class and a three hour seminar.

Mr. Foreman has participated in the Mid-Atlantic Movement Theater Festival in Baltimore, MD as the featured performer and in the New Playwrights Festival at Humbolt State University as a writer and choreographer in the movement theater.

Foreman is also a director, playwright, theater clinician and teacher. With these credentials and a Bachelor's degree in Fine Arts from the University of Southern Mississippi, he is certainly qualified. While sitting in on one of Mr. Foreman's performances it became clear that physical movement is, as one theater student put it, "the ability to act using a variety of different muscles." She described it as keeping in tune with your body.

Foreman got his start in the theater program at the University of Southern Mississippi. He decided to major in theater because "it incorporated all the things I was interested in," he commented.

Foreman has been performing and teaching for twenty years. When asked how would he describe what he does in his seminar classes he stated, "teaching has to do with how honestly the student comes to an exercise."

In giving his presentation, he expressed how difficult it is to deal with the arts because they are so abstract. He described the arts as a "lie that points to the truth: the work in theater is about a point of view. It is important to be able to see, but also have vision."

His performance was an excellent one. Ms. Arkin and Dr. Douglas Young were responsible for bringing Foreman to Longwood. It was both a gift and a treat to witness such brilliant work.

Mr. Foreman began his act by taking out a torn overcoat, a banana, a red nose, and a handkerchief. He utilized these props to transform himself into a clown.

As the audience witnessed this mime and movement specialist, it became clear that Foreman's act had the energy and power to create a few moments of magic.

Surprisingly, Mr. Foreman's clown act genuinely entertained a room full of college students and professors.

If you have missed the opportunity of seeing Foreman's work, it would be a good idea to view the fruits of his labor in the upcoming musical "Little Mary Sunshine". It opens September 30 and runs through October 3.

Violent Crimes Increase

Carjackings Spread in D.C.

By Brian Chapman
Staff Writer

A new crime is being committed in the nation's capitol, motorists are being assaulted and their cars stolen. The name of this new crime is called "carjacking" and there has already been over 250 cases resulting in five deaths this year.

Last week, there were three carjackings in three days. Two of the carjackings occured in Maryland and one in Northwest Washington.

Anthony Parrott was assaulted by two men late Tuesday night as he parked his sister's Accura Legend near his girlfriend's apartment. The men took the keys from Parrott and forced him into the passenger seat of the Legend.

As the men drove, they became nervous because an off-duty policeman was in the car behind them. One of the men threatened to kill Parrott but as their journey progressed, Parrott was able to jump out of the car that was travelling about 40 mph.

Parrott substained only light bruises and as the officier stopped to assist him, he explained that the men had stolen his car. The officer immediately gave chase to the two thieves as they travelled down Route 29 at speeds over 100 mph.

The chase ended when the car spun out of control and crashed into a wooded area. Both men were able to survive because airbags on the driver and passenger side were activated.

The two men were caught by Mongomery County police and charged with kidnapping, robbery, possesion of 18 chunks of rock cocaine worth over $12,600. A Glock 17 and Baretta semi-automatic were also recovered.

Another incident occured in Howard County that ended in the tragic death of an affluent chemist, Pamela Basu.

Ms. Basu was taking her 22-month old child to the first day of preschool when two men approached her car and sped off in her car. Basu's arm became tangled in the seatbelt of her BMW during the struggle and she was dragged for two miles before her arm came free.

The carjackers threw the child from the car but the child survived her wounds. Basu died from her wounds on the way to the hospital.

The two men were apprehended by Howard County policemen and were charged with first-degree muder, kidnapping, and robbery. Both men admitted to smoking marijuana mixed with PCP before the carjacking. One of the men, a 16 year old, will be tried as an adult.

In Northwest D.C., a red BMW was carjacked at gunpiont from a woman about noon on Friday. The woman was ordered to give the gunman her keys and was uninjured.

Chris Carbone Joins Career Center Staff

Charming, intelligent, insightful, interesting, and honest describe the new assistant director of Longwood's Career Center.

Twenty-six year old Chris Carbone arrivesto Farmville from many different places, bringing with him a new perspective that will only benefit the Career Center and Longwood's community.

The shaping of Carbone's ideas began in New England, just outside Boston, Mass. He then went on to a variety of places, but found his niche at Marshall University in West Virginia, where he received his undergraduate degree.

West Virginia mountains did not hold him for long, and soon warm southern drawls beckoned to pursue new avenues in the tarheel state. His calling led him to UNC-Greensboro where he earned his graduate degree.

I was curious as to how an ambitious, intelligent, well traveled young man could end up in Farmville.

Carbone's first impression of Farmville was not favorable. He thought, "there is no way I am going to end up in this town."

He soon changed his mind, however, when he began to meet some of the members of Longwood's community. "Everybody was very friendly, very willing to help," Carbone commented. "The faculty rapportwith students was more of reciprocal type of thing... The whole community atmosphere was a little bit stronger then other places I had been to.".

He not only was impressed by Longwood's friendly atmosphere, but he believed employment at Longwood cold be an, "... opportunity to learn, to grow... a very good career opportunity".

Upon returning this year, students were greeted with many physical changes on campus. When asked whether he would like to see internal changes at Longwood, Carbone remarked "my initial response would be I would change a lot, but I have not been here long enough to understand wholly the students, faculty, or understand how this puts together in the big picture. It's difficult to say."

Carbone went further to say that "the one thing, [and] this isn't specific to Longwood, [that is] frustrating [is that the] general population... do not have a real good idea of what is going on in society... as it relates to career development."

Many are aware that the current unemployment rate has reached staggering heights in recent months.

A concern of many recent and upcoming college graduates is the availability of jobs. Will there be jobs out there waiting for college graduates? Carbone's educated guess is that there are employment opportunities, but the competition is greater now than a few years ago.

"For as many college graduates as there are every year, they are not being employed at their level of skill and education. It's more competitive, and people who have planned ahead and know what the want to do. [Their] chances of finding a good job... in something that is relatively satisfying for them is pretty high."

Making yourself competitive is not the only thing that increases the chance of employment. Carbone also recommends that students have mobility. Restricting mobility could make the applicant less competitive.

Many students at Longwood are still trying to decide which path in life they would like to take. Carbone, when asked if he could deliver some advice which could possible help that undecided student pick a major course of study, said that he believes there is "something to be gained in any major. I feel very strongly that you can do anything you want with a major, but its having an understanding of what you want to do so that you can get that balance of the broad based things that a liberal arts degree you will be competitive."

Another bit of help for the undecided is the information on which careers are on the rise and which are declining. According to Carbone, highly skilled and health field careers are on the rise and service careers are on the way out.

Carbone's job is a service to the students at Longwood, but does he consider his job a valuable service? "Obviously or I wouldn't be sitting here," he answered.

"I am encouraged at the range of students I have seen already this semester. Part of that is credit to the faculty who have an understanding of some of the basic things that are important so they can tell students why some of those things are important and they are willing to do that."

Also pertinent was whether or not Carbone felt that Longwood graduates adequately compete with college graduates around the country.

Carbone has no qualms in that area. He said "I really feel like individual motivation is such a big part. If you know what you want to do, you can be an astronaut with an English major if you know how you are going to obtain the skills necessary to get to that level."

The biggest impression that Carbone gives is that we are all capable of achieving great things in life, but nothing is given away. To achieve great things we must apply ourselves and work hard to reach the goals we set for ourselves.

Students and Teachers Benefit

Nursery School Afford Learning Opportunity

By Jenny Evans
Staff Writer

Recently, Longwood College opened its doors once again to young children in Farmville and surrounding areas.

The Longwood Laboratory Nursery School took in eighteen children, ranging in age from four to five years old. The Nursery School, which is run by the Education Department and instructed by Marilyn Osborn, was founded in 1970 by the College's Home Economics Department.

The Longwood College Laboratory Nursery School focuses its daily program on three major objectives.

The first objective is to provide a natural setting in which preschool children are stimulated to learn.

The second objective is to provide a setting for Longwood College students preparing to become teachers. The students are able to interact with children and gain knowledge of their behavior.

The third objective is to involve the parents in their child's education and learning.

Preschool children attend a half-day program which offers individual and group activities. The Nursery School schedule consists of arrival, group time and individual planning, work-play period, clean up and review, snack and book time, outdoor work-play time, circle-small group time, and departure.

It approaches learning and teaching through cognitive development. The school's philosophy is that all children are individuals, and that they learn best with hands-on experience.

Children are also encouraged to make their own decisions and to cooperate with others. A variety of materials and activities are available to the children to choose from daily. When planning the curriculum, intellectual, physical, emotional, and creative development are all considered.

As mentioned before, the Longwood College Nursery School also opened its doors to students majoring in education. Students study the development of preschool children, participate in guidance, and plan activities for the children.

This course is one of the two required practicums that elementary education majors must take. The practicums offer students an opportunity to decide if education is what they want.

For those who know they want to teach, the course offers knowledge and experience necessary before student teaching and becoming a professional.

R.A.'s Challenged By Job

By James Whiteree
Staff Writer

Resident Assistants are an integral part of student life at Longwood College. Many people are unaware of the duties and responsibilities that an Resident Assistant (R.A.) has. Some look at the R.A.s as villains who are out to get them, and their purpose is often misconstrued.

R.A.'s are generally in the residence to be of assistance and enforce the rules that govern the dormitories. Every floor in the dorms has an R.A. to check up on the goings-on around the floor and to assist the residents.

To be a Resident Assistant, you must have an above-average G.P.A. and have the kind of credentials necessary to fill the position.

There is also an interview, which is necessary for those individuals who are interested in this position. This interview does have some bearing on whether they will become an R.A.

The advantages of being an R.A. are free room and board, free voice mail, as well as the obvious advantages in the fact that the individual gains experience in counseling and handling crises.

According to Chris Dunn, an R.A. on 3rd floor N. Cunningham, the major benefits of being an R.A. are experience interacting with individuals, new experiences in helping people, and making residents welcome, especially in the first week.

Dunn also added that there are benefits in helping others to understand about the school and their regulations.

This is Dunn's first semester as an R.A. and he says "It's a good, worthwhile position that helps you become more sociable resulting from the communication with the residents."

There are also many problems that R.A.'s have to encounter while on the job.

Gregg Baird, an R.A. on 1st floor S. Cunningham, discussed some of these problems. According to Baird, the most common problems are work-order requests and noise violations.

Some of the biggest problems that occur, continues Baird, have come during Oktoberfest and Spring Weekends. It is then when crowds of people, primarily Alumni, come down and get rather wild, such as running around with open beer containers in the dorms. Baird says "it all hits you at one time and gets incredibly hectic."

Other than on those weekends, Baird feels that those kinds of problems generally are not a common occurrence during the course of a semester.

The position of Resident Assistant is one that quite a few people try for, but isn't all that easy to attain. Chris Dunn explains that "one should not be afraid to be an R.A. It's a needed job, a wanted job and a job where you try to be understanding."

To keep your position, it is essential to keep grades up, as an R.A. must maintain a 2.5 G.P.A.

This despite the fact that there may be some distractions along the way. Baird says that it helps that the staff in the Cunninghams are very supportive of each other.

There is still a growing need for R.A.'s. It's a position that hopefully more people will look in

Spencer's Magic Show Dazzles

By Michael Carter
Staff Writer

On Friday, September 4th, Longwood College and The Series of Performing Arts presented the Spencers, a husband and wife magic show team from Lynchburg, Va.

The show consisted of illusions ranging from cards to E.S.P. to a disappearing act. Audience participation was a key to the success of the show as members of the audience were brought up on stage to help in performing the various acts of illusion.

Volunteers from the audience ranged from a six year old boy to members of the community. The innocence and wonderment of the participants helped make for a comical show as Kevin Spencer kept everything fast-paced and upbeat.

As soon as everyone stopped laughing from one of Kevin Spencer's one liners, he would silence the crowd with a trick that left everyone's mouth hanging open in amazement and disbelief.

The show ended with one of Harry Houdini's tricks, named "metamorphosis," during the course of which Spencer was chained and locked inside of a box.

A curtain was raised around the box, and after a few moments the four audience participants on stage stared in amazement as the curtain dropped to show Kevin standing on top of the box free of the chains that had been locked around his hands.

The box was then opened to reveal Kevin's wife, Cindy, inside wearing the chains that had been locked on Kevin just moments before.

This magical team is no newcomer to the magic scene. Kevin and Cindy Spencer began in a show called The Healing of Magic in 1984 to help the physically challenged in hospitals.

In 1990, the Spencers were nominated for the Jefferson Award, which was presented by the Kennedy Center. They received the Young Virginian Award in 1991 for Outstanding Contribution to the state of Virginia.

Although the Spencers make magic look fun, it is also a dangerous line of work. This January the Spencers will be changing their show and including a Harry Houdini water trick which Kevin has not performed in over three years because of a near fatal experience he suffered when last attempting it.

The planned changes should make for an interesting show.

New VPAA Takes Office

By Mandi Ping

Dr. Darryl G. Poole is the new Vice President for academic affairs at Longwood College. He is head of the Arts and Sciences, Education and Human Services, and Business and Economics, as well as the Registrar's office, Learning Center, Minority Affairs, Athletics, Continuing Studies, and the Library. He came to Longwood from the University of Northern Kentucky University where he was the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences for the past twelve years. Dr. Poole and his wife, Judi, have two grown sons. One is currently attending the University of Colorado; the other is employed by Lufthansa Airlines and resides in Fairfax, Virginia.

Dr. Poole enjoys "the small close knit community" of Farmville and adds that "the rhythm" of a small town is quite different than the city. "You can escape to privacy" faraway from others here, but in the city "one can stand in the middle of a crowd" and be private because you probably won't know anyone. These are some of the qualities he was looking for when becoming a vice president began to come into perspective. He knew that it would take time and experience to become a "good" vice president so he put all of his effort and strength into being a successful dean. From here it was just a matter of time before the office of vice president would come into play. Longwood College has willingly and gratefully accepted Dr. Poole into our community with great hopes and expectations of an even better academic year.

"Like any school, Longwood has its problems", but that is why the office of vice president of academic affairs was created. Dr. Poole has many "ideas" from having worked at the University of Kentucky for twenty years, but each school is different in size as well as needs. The graduate program is one of the areas that Dr. Poole is currently working on. Longwood has already been given the okay on the masters in applied sociology made possible by the Halifax/South Boston Continuing Education Center. The only thing holding the program back is the lack of faculty. As soon as the number of faculty members increases the program will be implemented. The job placement program is another area of concern. The staff of the Longwood Career Center are "responsible for setting up workshops and seminars, which they have done faithfully, but it is the responsibility of the student to attend these meetings" and allow the staff to assist them in their job search and placement. The career center will keep trying new approaches and ideas in attracting students.

Dr. Poole is getting better aquatinted with Longwood's academic society as well as the traditions and rituals of Longwood. Convocation was a "new and exciting experience. Again, it is quite a different atmosphere than the University of Kentucky having 12,000 commuter students. The crying that took place in August when the students were moving into the dorms was also touching". Dr. Poole is very interested in the traditions of Longwood and is looking forward to being a part of our ritualistic ceremonies which make us so unique.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years—or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferred savings. Your money starts to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month, beginning at age 25, and you can accumulate over $250,000* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $200 each month to reach the same goal.

Even if you're not counting the years to retirement, you can count on TIAA-CREF to help you build the future you deserve—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research put TIAA-CREF at the top of their list for retirement planning. Why not join them?

Skippy's Adventure

Once upon a time there was a cute, fuzzy, little squirrel named Skippy. All spring and summer long, Skippy would work very hard gathering nuts for the long winter ahead. Oh how he loved to prance and frolic in the warm sun. He was very, very happy.

Then one day, in late summer, when Skippy was returning to his cozy nest to prepare for a long nights sleep, he was crushed to death by a passing Yugo.

The End.

Field Hockey Squad Opens Season 1-2

By Greg Prouty

Longwood's field hockey squad opened the 1992 season on the road dropping two of its first three games. Last Wednesday, the Lady Lancers shut-out Pfeiffer 6-0 in Misenheimer, N.C., then traveled to Elkins, W. Va. where they lost 4-1 to Davis & Elkins Saturday before losing 1-0 to the University of Louisville Sunday.

Against Louisville, the Lady Lancers suffered a heartbreaker against the NCAA Division I Lady Cardinals. Sophomore goalkeeper Sara Hogan (Charlottesville) did manage 11 saves in the net for Longwood in the evenly contested event.

On Saturday, Longwood trailed D & E 1-0 at the intermission, rallied to knott the score at 1-1 early in the second half, only to have the Lady Senators score the game's last three goals for the 4-1 decision. Senior Susie Lindsay (Charlottesville) scored the Lady Lancers goal on a penalty stroke, while Hogan recorded nine saves. It was Lindsay's first career goal. Davis & Elkins is also Division I .

"D & E played a very physical game," commented third-year coach Sandy Bridgeman. "It was a frustrating weekend for us after we had won our opener at Pfeiffer."

The season-opening victory at Pfeiffer marked a number of career-firsts for several Lady Lancers. Sophomore Mari Willen (Mechanicsville, Md.) scored her first two career goals to lead Longwood, while others scoring for LC included juniors Missy Moran (Va. Beach), a goal and two assists; and Nora Lamb (Newport News), a goal and an assist; along with freshmen Bridget Bryson (Fairfax) and Amy Hegna (Cranford, N.J.), each with a goal. Senior Jenny Wuebker (Mineral) and freshman Teri Lewis (Va. Beach) also added assists for the Lady Lancers. It was also the first career goal for Lamb, Bryson, and Hegna. Hogan recorded her second career shutout while making seven saves in the net.

It was the first season-opening victory for Longwood since the 1989 squad began with a 1-0 defeat of D & E. The six goals scored by Longwood marks the highest output by the Lady Lancers since 1987, when LC scored six goals against both Randolph-Macon and Appalachian State.

Longwood is idle until this weekend when it travels to Lynchburg to participate in the North-South Field Hockey Classic hosted by Lynchburg College. The 1-2 Lady Lancers will face Catholic and Lynchburg Saturday before playing Denison Sunday.

Lady Golfers Rebound From Slow Start

Longwood's women's golf team rebounded from a slow start and played well the last two days while shooting 331-322-321-974 to finish 13th out of 17 teams at the 17th Lady Tar Heel Tournament Friday through Sunday at Finely Golf Course in Chapel Hill, N.C.

Host North Carolina (897) edged neighbor Duke (900) for the team title and Tar Heel senior Kimberly Byham won the individual title with a two-under-par 73-74-70-217. Longwood finished ahead of Division I teams from James Madison, Penn State, Memphis State and Coastal Carolina.

Lady Lancer sophomore Charlaine Coetzee (Durbanville, Capetown, S.Africa) fired a personal collegiate best 77-79-75-231 to place 18th in a field of 90 golfers. Her score was the lowest for a Longwood golfer in Chapel Hill since 1987 when current LPGA pro Tina Barrett shot 78-77-71- 226 to finish seventh. Coetzee has been named Longwood College Player of the Week.

Longwood sophomore Brenda Campbell-Harris (Somerset West, S.Africa) and senior captain Anna Radford (Kent, England) also played well, while freshmen Anna Holm (Hestra, Sweden) and Janine Ballow (Kingston, Ontario, Canada) improved their scores after shaky starts. Campbell- Harris shot 80-78-81-239 for 48th place and Radford carded an 83-80-82-245 to tie for 56th. Holm scored a 91-87-83-261 while Ballow had a 92-85-86-263.

This week Longwood hosts the 16th Tina Barrett/Longwood Invitational Saturday and Sunday at Longwood Golf Course with a field of eight teams, including James Madison and William & Mary.

Men's Soccer Emerges Unbeaten for 8th Year

Longwood won three of four games last week in soccer and finished unbeaten in the Hardee's Southside Virginia Soccer Classic for the eighth year in a row while improving its early season record to 3-2 overall and 2-0 in the Eastern Division of the Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association.

Led by All-Classic players Jason Casano (N. Babylon, N.Y.), Byron Edwards (Richmond) and Ross Johnson (Va.Beach-Cox), Longwood beat Shenandoah 4-2 Saturday and Marymount 4-1 Sunday. The Lancers now have a record of 22-4 in the event since it began as a tournament in 1980.

In other Southside Classic action, Hampden-Sydney beat Marymount 4-0 Saturday and dropped a 4-1 decision to Shenandoah Sunday. Casano, who was All-Classic last year also, was named MVP Defender after helping the Lancers notch two victories. Also named to the All-Classic team were Jonathan Thayer (MVP) Forward, Curtis Player and Chris Dodson of Hampden-Sydney; Sean Mullins, Mike Gargan and John Morlu of Marymount; and Mike Dainelson, J.D. Combs and John Eddinger of Shenandoah.

Johnson and Todd Dyer (Montclair) had two goals each in the Classic while Edwards, Casano, Kevin Carey (Monmouth Beach, N.J.) and Alan Kidd (Tabb) had one apiece.

In other games last week, Longwood edged Hampden-Sydney 2-1 Monday on late goals by Casano and Edwards and dropped a 3-2 decision at home to Virginia Military Institute. Carey and Jon Gates (Prince George) notched goals in the VMI contest. Freshman John Lee (Dale City) had two assists for the week.

Longwood's wins over Marymount and Shenandoah give the Lancers a 2-0 VISA Eastern Division mark heading into another VISA match-up at Christopher-Newport Wednesday at 3:30.

Finishes 18th In Tough Field At UNC

Coetzee Is Player Of The Week

Sophomore golfer Charlaine Coetzee (Durbanville, Capetown, S.Africa), who scored a 77-79-75-231 at the Lady Tar Heel Tournament over the weekend, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period Sept. 6-13. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

Coetzee's effort, her best since coming to Longwood, placed her 18th in a field of 90 golfers from some of the top Division I women's golf squads in the nation. Her score was the lowest for a Longwood golfer in Chapel Hill since 1987 when current LPGA pro Tina Barrett shot 78-77- 71- 226 to finish seventh.

After qualifying fourth in the preseason, Coetzee was Longwood's top golfer in the University of North Carolina tournament. A National Golf Coaches Association All-American last season, Coetzee had a stroke average of 81.8 for the year. She was fourth, LC's best, in the NGCA Tournament last spring with an 80-81-77-238.

A history major at Longwood, Coetzee as named Sportswoman of the Year twice in Durbanville. She played field hockey, softball and tennis as well as golf before coming to Longwood.

College Students Grapple With 'Family Values' Issue

By John Williams

(CPS) - The economy and the state of higher education are important to college and university students, but "family values" is another hot-button issue in the presidential campaign that has provoked heated discussion on campuses.

Although widely used, the phrase is not easily defined, especially in the context of what family values mean for college students

"There are a lot of issues within that term that affect students' lives," said Stacey Leyton, president of the United States Student Association.

"Many are returning students trying to support their families by finishing their education. you will find single mothers and single fathers returning to school. They must have access to bettering themselves and their families as tuition goes up, child care is cut and programs are reduced."

Neither political party has succinctly been able to explain what is meant by family values in a time where single-parent households, single and divorced people, and gay and lesbian parents and other groups challenge the concept of what defines a traditional American family.

"Young people identify with embracing family values. I define family values as a lot of issues raised in the country about the breakdown of the American family," said Tony Zagotta, president of College Republicans. "The Republican view is to strengthen the family and show concern for the family. Young people are looking for stability. They may not want family life at 18, but they do want something for the future."

Jamie Harmon, president of College Democrats, said the term is "hard to define," but settled on calling it "traditional morality that young people think is important. Especially for young people, family values is economy. It's hard to have family values when you don't have a home."

If there was a defining moment in this nebulous battle over values, it was perhaps when Vice President Dan Quayle assailed the plot o the TV show "Murphy Brown." Brown, a successful television personality, is single, gets pregnant and decides to keep the child when the father leaves town. Quayle said the show made a mockery of the father's role in the family.

"The medial and Hollywood portrayed it as an attack on single mothers. The whole thing is that the media exaggerated by saying the vice president attacked single mothers. He was saying it was wrong to demean the role of fatherhood," Zagotta said. "I think what the vice president did was a good thing. If he encouraged people to take a second look at family life and getting to the root of defining the country, it will lead to a better country."

Harmon said Democratic presidential candidate Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, and his running mate, U.S. Sen. Al Gore or Tennessee, believe their party upholds the belief that a family "is something inclusive, not exclusive. It means loving your family no matter what."

Faculty Salary Disparities Create Consternation Among Some

By Erin McCay
Editor in Chief

There is a joke currently making the rounds among Longwood's faculty members. The basic premise of it is as follows: a disgruntled student approaches his professor and states his displeasure, followed with the comment "Remember, my father pays your salary!" The professor's laconic reply? "Well, does he want his quarter back?"

Unfortunately, salaries are no laughing matter to Longwood College faculty members.

According to a 1992 investigation performed by the House Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, the average salary for a public university professor is $63,000. However, only one faculty member, Dr. Joe Lavely, reaches or exceeds that national average.

Dr. Lavely, a professor in the Business Department since 1989, receives $67,001 annually.

Only two other faculty members, also members of the school of business, receive $60,000 a year or more annually.

The two lowest paid faculty members belong to the Health, Physical Education, and Recreation Department (HPER). Don DeGraff, who receives $26,900, and Rodney Williams, whose annual salary is $28,000, both joined the HPER Department within the last three years.

However, in some departments the salaries of brand new professors exceeds that of long standing faculty members. For example, one member of the English Department since 1976 makes less than a new addition to that department.

The highest-paid faculty member in the English Department is Dr. Donald Stuart, who last year stepped down from his position as Vice President Academic Affairs. Dr Stuart is paid $47,189 annually.

Such salary disparities are also evident outside of each individual department.

Dr. Lee Bidwell, of the Sociology Department, was a recent recipient of a salary "compression adjustment," an attempt by the administration to make salaries more equitable by using funds made available by retiring faculty members.

"I am satisfied with my salary," said Bidwell. "[However,]" she continued, "I believe administration is aware of faculty salary discrepancies.

Many faculty members are disgruntled by the financial attention focused on the Business Department.

According to Dr. Robert Webber, who recently conducted a study sponsored by the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors, this situation is "certainly a bone of contention."

He went on to explain that "four or five years ago the schools were about equal, but in the past several years the School of Business has increased [to a] several thousand dollar difference."

One reason cited for this increased salary funding according to Webber is the need to attract competent business faculty members to the institution.

But according to one professor, this reasoning is no longer valid. "This reasoning does not make sense when so many people in the field of business are losing their jobs." Also, he continued, "according a U.S. News and World Report study, employers prefer to hire liberal arts/social science majors, people who can write well and deal with people, and then offer on-the-job training in that particular field."

Dr. Webber explains the continued concentration on the business department by saying "it takes a couple of years for trends to catch up [with an institution.]"

Of the 16 faculty members who receive over $50,000 annually, nine are members of the Business Department. The department with the next highest number of similarly-salaried members is the Natural Sciences Department, with three.

In all departments but the Business Department, those receiving such wages have been at Longwood since at least 1972. However, the longest any recipient of over $50,000 annually in the business department has been teaching at Longwood was since 1983.

Angry Students Question Charges

Petition Challenges Meal Plan Prices

By Kelly Vanderherchen
Staff Writer

Last week, a petition was circulated by an anonymous group of students concerning the 15 and 19 meal plans.

These students expressed anger through the petition, stating that they feel that they, the students, are being cheated out of unclaimed meals.

To identify the different meal plans, the 15 meal plan allows a student a total of 15 meals per week. The 19 meal plan allows for 19 meals per week, which is designed for new students and big eaters.

There is also a 5 meal plan designed to let commuter students have lunch on campus.

With these plans, students are allowed to choose the location they wish to take their meals.

The three choices are the Blackwell Dining Room, the Rotunda Market, and the Pizza Hut Express. The five meal plan allows students to choose between the dining hall and the Rotunda Market.

The cost factors of the 15 and 19 meal plan is one of the major issues of the petition. According to the petition, the students feel the college is "consciously [taking] our money for meals we are not allowed to receive." This is referring to unclaimed meals.

The cost of the 19 meal plan is $1830 per year and the 15 meal plan is $1686 per year. According to Richard Hurley, Vice President of Business Affairs, the students are being charged less than what the meals actually cost.

"Our goal is to keep your [student] costs as low as possible," Mr. Hurley said. Participation in the meal plan plays "a really important consideration in setting the fees."

He commented that both he and the college know that students do not eat all of the meals they pay for.

This factor is incorporated into setting the rates. If all the students actually ate all of the allotted meals, the prices would be higher.

John Brady, Food Services Director, remarked also on the participation factor by stating, "We know students will miss meals. Our budget is based on a lower meal plan [than is actually charged to the students]."

This anticipation of missed meals helps to further lower the costs, he added.

As to the question of why students are not allowed multiple entries per day in any of the locations, Mr. Brady responded that it was because of two issues.

One, he said, was a control issue. "For us [the food services], to have sufficient food, we have to limit one entry per meal," he explained.

He said this helps to eliminate a possible shortage of food or an overabundance of food, possibly resulting in waste. "We have to plan for everybody," he said.

As to the second issue, he stated that using other students I.D.'s or meal plans "[is] misrepresentation. It's an honor issue [to use another person's meal card].

In relation to the petition, Mr. Hurley said "we [the college] deal with this every two years." He explained that since this issue was not deallt with last year, freshmen and sophomores are not familiar with the factors involved in determining meal rates.

Mr. Hurley and Mr. Brady have both read the petition and both stress the issue of misinformation. Mr. Brady said it is "almost an allegation," and that "Petitions should clarify things [issues] a little more clearly."

Alcohol Use and Poor Grades Performance Linked

By Jenny Evans
Staff Writer

A study released recently has found that students at small colleges drink more than students from larger campuses.

Researchers from Southern Illinois University and the College of William and Mary collected information through surveys on 78 campuses during the 1989-1990 school year. The study was based on responses from 56,000 students.

The study also found, as stated in a Winchester Star report, that students with low grades consume three times as much alcohol as those on honor roll..

According to the Star, the purpose of the study was to help campus leaders realize the frequency and use of alcohol and to aid in designing programs for alcohol abusers.

Longwood's leaders have provided a variety of programs dealing with alcohol. consumption. Among those are Alcoholics Anonymous (AA), support groups (such as for Adult Children of Alcoholics), and the recently created Student Organization of Alcohol Responsibility (S.O.A.R.).

Information found during the course of the study showed that at four-year schools with enrollments of approximately 3,000 students, those under the age of 24 imbibed an averaged seven drinks a week. This figure was compared to schools with approximately 20,000 students, who averaged 4.59 drinks per week.

The reason for this difference may be because small schools tend to be located in rural areas, where there is little entertainment for students, such as in the Farmville community.

According to some, because the college makes up a large portion of the community, students believe that it is difficult to find things to do off-campus.

Farmville lacks a large variety of clubs, theaters, or restaurants. As a result, some may turn to drinking and conform to the behavior of other students.

The study by William and Mary does not establish a direct link between drinking and low grades, but it does suggest that such a relationship exists.

The study found that students who were getting D's and F's were averaging 11 drinks a week, while students with A's were averaging 3 drinks per week.

Alcohol is popular on almost all campuses. Eighty-six percent of all respondents in the study had used alcohol in the past year, and 45 percent said they drink on a weekly basis.

PERSPECTIVES

STUDENTS ARE ROTUNDA'S PRIORITY

September seems to be a little warmer than usual this year, at least to those of us on the Rotunda Editorial staff.

What we don't understand is why.

Why is that almost every one of Longwood's upper-level administrators is frothing at the mouth at the idea of a condom (ooh, that word!) placed in a newspaper whose readership is from one of the most sexually active age groups in America?

Face it, folks. Students are away from home and living with members of the opposite gender for the first time and they are ... hey, remember, the sexual revolution began with your generation.

But chin up. If you all continue with your "lets be civil while we hide our head in the sand" attitude, all those troublesome, sexually active, non-condom users will be dropping out of school because they are:

A. Pregnant
B. Infected with an STD
C. Both

I'm sure its fairly easy for you to dismiss this possibilty. Especially with all your practice in painting pretty pictures and thus avoiding reality.

Here's how it really is:

Its dirty.
Its ugly.
Its deadly.

The facts are there. People are having unprotected sex at an appalling rate. And you all don't seem willing to do much about it.

It seems that administrators are more interested in the image of the college than the welfare of its students. Dr. Poole, the new Vice President for Academic Affairs, asked us to consider "the College's point of view" when writing stories and opinion pieces.

But to the Rotunda, the college is not Dr. Dorrill, Phyllis Mable (so concerned with civility), or any one of the number of frantic, scurrying administrators that inhabit Ruffner.

It is the students who are Longwood. It is they for whom we have primary concern. For years the Rotunda has lain dormant, dealing only with the most inoffensive of topics.

But the Rotunda can longer be a publicity sheet for the institution at the expense of the student body, who have suffered more than enough in recent years under the neglect of the administration, SGA, and, we are forced to admit, the Rotunda itself.

We, the Rotunda, pledge to continue to serve the welfare of the student body as best we can, despite the byzantine machinations and plottings of the administrators.

Some have questioned as to why we are reporting salaries in this issue. Its really quite simple. We believe students should know what they are paying for, and quite frankly, its information -- and that's our business

POINT

Name Calling By Administration: Rotunda Accused of Yellow Journalism

By H. Donald Winkler

As one of the few professional journalists on this campus, I have followed with considerable interest the tone of this year's Rotunda.

First, I must commend you for your coverage of such general-interest items as senior capping, the new fraternity, alcohol-free dorms, and the new fitness trail.

At the same time, it is sad and disappointing to see an increasing number of sensationalized articles that contain innuendo, false statements, half-truths, unbalanced information, and poor grammar. Such irresponsible reporting and editing reflect poorly on the professional training and ability of the editors, as well as on the College itself.

Now, I have absolutely no quarrel with your attempts to cover both good and bad news relevant to students. That's your responsibility as a student journalist. But I have no tolerance for stories that distort the truth, mislead readers, and create perceptions that do not reflect reality.

Let me cite a few examples:

1. "Just Use It!!!" (Page 8, Sept. 21). This reference to the condom as the safe way to avoid AIDS is misleading and, in fact, could lead to a person getting AIDS. Your editorial on Page 2 stated, "if you don't want them (kids) having an abortion or getting sick, just buy them some condoms." Health officials will tell you that condoms are not 100 percent safe — they can and do break, and they frequently are used improperly. Abstinence is the most effective method of preventing AIDS, but this "radical" alternative is not emphasized or suggested by the Rotunda. With your emphasis on using condoms and your failure to encourage abstinence, you are contributing to the false perception that "everyone is doing it, and so should you." In reality, everyone who does not practice abstinence is at risk, with or without a condom. Of course, condoms should be used by those who are going "to do it," but where in your commentary do we find a discussion about the relationship of values and love to sex? On a related matter, is it ethical for a newspaper to purchase, endorse, and distribute a commercial product within its news columns? Is it ethical to use advertising funds for that purpose without so notifying the advertisers? Is this a misappropriation of funds? Have you obtained advice on any of these issues?

2. Misspelled words: In your article, "Vandals Despoil Frazer," you use the word "excrament" at least twice. There is no such word. And in a Page 1 article on Sept. 21, you invented another word, "intermurals," and used it at least four times. We all make typos, but these errors are not typos.

3. In your editorial on Page 2 on Sept. 14, you said "tons of money have been spent recently to build a new residence hall...Coming up in the 'Beautify Longwood' campaign is a fetching brick wall that will encircle the campus." You might have checked with the Vice President for Business Affairs on how dorms are financed. As for a brick wall encircling the campus, that's totally off-the-wall. It's just not true. You also state, "what little money there is goes not to increasing the staff and services for the students." To the contrary, services have been steadily increasing at Longwood in spite of a state-mandated cut of 22 percent in Longwood's general fund budget since 1990. For more information, read the President's Report for 1991-92 (I've seen nothing about it in the Rotunda) and interview Vice Presidents Hurley, Mable, and Cross, among others.

I am also disappointed when I read of your plans to print the salaries of Longwood personnel. People are hired in a highly competitive environment, and earn salaries and wages commensurate with their abilities, experience, and going rate among peer institutions. I cannot understand why their salaries should be made public. Yes, you have the "right" to publish them, and, yes, your consumers will relish them. The anti-civility folks will be ecstatic. But what about the impact on the people whose salaries are published? Will it please you to create staff and faculty morale problems as people compare salaries and become envious or jealous? Or do you care? Does it matter to you that many of us could be making considerable more money in the private sector had we chosen that career direction years ago? Or that state employees have not had a raise in two years? Convince me as to what noble journalistic cause is served by telling everyone who is making what. Editors have enormous responsibilities and should consider the ethical aspects of what they choose to publish. More and more journalists are asking, "Is it right or wrong to publish a particular item." I ask you to do the same.

Fairness, accuracy, good motives, and a desire to be objective and responsible are hallmarks of good journalists. I hope these goals are your goals. While cynicism, amateurism, and the "thrill" of yellow journalism are not uncommon among beginning journalists, we hope that, at Longwood, such practices will fade away.

COUNTERPOINT

Advisor Defends Rotunda

By William C. Woods

As advisor to the Rotunda, I read with interest the letter from Don Winkler published in this issue. It's a genuine pleasure to hear from a member of the administration who seems to be following the paper's fortunes so closely.

Mr. Winkler (who is quick to tell us that he is "one of few professional journalists on this campus") is quite right in calling to our attention a number of the Rotunda's abiding problems - notably haphazard copy editing, and stories ignored or incompletely covered. Of course, these difficulties have been with the paper for some time. It is remarkable that Mr. Winkler seems not to have noticed them until now -especially given that, during the last two years, they have been less evident than ever before.

It also puzzles me that Mr. Winkler's close study of our many flaws has failed to yield acknowledgment of certain signal virtues: steadily enhanced production values, clearer section design, more coherent staff structure, more active editing, the addition of columns by professional journalists, and the aggressive exploration of a greater number of controversial issues (well, OK, maybe he did notice that).

One such issue seems to be the advent of the dreaded condom. Mr. Winkler suggests that the Rotunda has misled readers by claiming that condoms are absolute protection against AIDS, but I do not find that claim in these pages. He also tasks the paper with failing to explore "the relationship of values and love to sex," although he cannot convince us the paper has any obligation to do so.

Above all, Mr. Winkler finds the physical presence of a glued-in condom distressing. Should, he asks, a newspaper distribute a commercial product within its news columns? (The condom is taped to an article clearly labeled "opinion.")

And so on. I don't intend to dispute the rest of Mr. Winkler's arguments in detail — they may stand or fall on their own — though I admit I'm intrigued by his extraordinary anxiety over the Rotunda's plan to reveal staff salaries. Properly handled, it is an important story; otherwise, it's just a list of numbers.

None of the above concerns me unduly. Mr. Winkler's concluding fanfare concerns me a good deal. He accuses the Rotunda of "cynicism, amateurism, and the 'thrill' of yellow journalism." Cynicism is the unhappy product of skepticism turned rancid through exposure to too many lies — it's not unheard of in the trade. Amateurism is the inevitable state of the beginner, and (if we attend to the root meaning of the word) not altogether undesirable in a journalist. As for yellow journalism, that's an unattractive charge that's easy to make when we don't like what we're reading.

Mr. Winkler certainly hasn't much liked what he's recently been reading. It's understandable. As Longwood's chief public relations officer, his job is to present the college to the public in the best possible light. An issue of the Rotunda that gives away condoms, explores campus vandalism, and exposes racial tensions doesn't make that job any easier. It doesn't make my job easier, either; but it increases my pride in my association with a publication that has remarkable strides in the past two years under two energetic editors who know the difference between good journalism and PR.

Mr. William C. Woods is an Assistant Professor of English and has advised The Rotunda since 1976.

Views Differ on Campus

Editor, Rotunda:

I do realize that your own personal views on abortion differ greatly from mine. However, after a number of articles in your newspaper that are pro-choice, I feel that it is only fair that the other side be allowed to present its view. That is the reason why I have written to the Rotunda. Jennifer Moentmann has insulted an organization whose cause is one that my family and I deeply believe in. I feel compelled to reply and explain the prolide side of the story.

Abortion Rights Questioned

Editor, Rotunda:

I would like to respond to the letter to the editor written by Ms. Jennifer Moentmann (September 21, 1992) regarding her misleading and slanderous attack on pro-lifers everywhere. You may have strong pro-choice views and have every right to express them, but you have absolutely no idea about those who disagree with you and what they represent.

First of all, people who are pro-life place the utmost importance on the sacredness of human life. All individuals should be guaranteed the right to live, and the right to be protected from conception to a natural death. We are not interested in taking away the rights of women, nor are we afraid of women in power. We are interested in giving every unborn child a chance to live his/her own life.

In fact, there are more women than men in pro-life organizations, and the presidents of most of those organizations are women. We as human beings cannot "choose" whether a baby should be born or not — no matter how bad the quality of a child's future may appear to be. But if the future of a mother and a child do appear to be bleak, there are numerous pro-life charities located throughout the nation that will financially and emotionally assist pregnant women should the mother decide against abortion. That is the backbone of our organization!! It is more important than any protest or demonstration we organize. Our goal is to help BOTH WOMAN and CHILD during and after pregnancy. And we are just as easy to find as any abortion clinic.

For those who believe the unborn child is not a living human being: 24 days after conception, a baby's heart beats regularly, and after 11 weeks has every organ present and functioning. During the first trimester a baby begins swallowing, urinating, digesting, and even reacting to light and noise.

In conclusion, we are not an extremist minority! A USA Today poll taken over the summer shows that approximately 70-75% of all Americans believe abortion is morally wrong, that 62% or Americans favor the landmark Supreme Court decision Casey v. Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania, which upheld a state's right to restrict abortion, and nearly 80% favor parental notification laws for minors. Pro-lifers are not racist, red-neck, narrow-minded, backward Neanderthals as some people would like America to believe. We are just as urban as anybody else, so Donita Sparks and Jennifer Moentmann, get the facts before you stereotype anyone who disagrees with you.

President Dorrill Deemed Useless

Editor, Rotunda:

I think ARA Dining Services should give us better food. They won't do that unless they get more money. I say give them more money. Good meals are essential to student morale, as well as an overall satisfaction with campus life. But alas, where ever could that money come from?

Hmm. We could take the money from Gov. Wilder's personal income. He'll get over it. I don't think anyone at Longwood likes Wilder, and if they do, they shouldn't. He cut our budget. I don't believe in ever cutting education. I'd rather see more taxes (like the new state liquor tax—where does that money go?) before education gets cut.

Maybe we could take President Dorrill's salary. Why do we pay him, anyway? I've never seen him before. I used to think he didn't exist, now I just think he doesn't matter. Who needs money more, ARA or Dr. Dorrill? Makes me wonder.

Maybe we could pay more tuition. Think about it. Other schools cost more and have excessively lousy food. It wouldn't hurt us financialy, or at least not much, especially since most people let mommy and daddy pay for school. You guys shut up - I'm not talking to you. Since I pay, I matter, and I'm willing to pay a little more for a little better food. Meals are a very social time, and tend to be more enjoyable when you and your friends actually enjoy the food. Then maybe we can give Dr. Dorrill's salary to something that is worse than our food, like our library.

FIXING A HOLE by Hope Jones

Last week, the Rotunda distributed Saxon Wet Lubricated condoms through the newspaper.

Suddenly, this is news everywhere. Was it a marketing ploy? Or a genuine concern for our generation? This point is being discussed everywhere.

What a stupid controversy.

What everyone should be concerned about is that the most commonly used condom, Trojan brand, is one of the worst condoms one can buy.

They have one hell of a marketing scam. We all know of the "Trojan Man!!" commercial, and the name Trojan is synonymous with the word 'condom,' just as Kleenex is with 'sniffle tissue' or Q-tip with 'cotton swab'.

According to Consumer Reports (Vol. 54, Iss. 12, Dec. 1989) Trojan's suck.

The Rotunda, however, distributed over 1000 Saxon condoms, which are rated #3 on a chart of approximately 40 types of condoms. Trojans' placed in the last third.

16,000 latex condoms were checked through a water test (filling each condom with 10 ounces of H2O!!!) and again through an "air-burst" test (condoms are inflated until they break, usually to watermelon size).

Syphilis, gonorrhea, chlamydia, genital herpes and AIDS. These are the things we should be worried about. Our generation of 25 million 18-24 year-olds are being pushed around by organizations and other people not even affiliated with our educational institution!! And within our generation of 25 million 18-24 year-olds, we keep them in power!!

Okay, I'm attempting to calm down now. But Tuesday ,November 3rd, is coming up, and I'm losing hair. I can't imagine not showing up to vote because we can be potent.

We're not just in college to get a degree. We're here to find a purpose. I don't know what your purpose is.

Hell, I don't know if I could articulate mine if I tried. But it certainly doesn't include taking heat over trying to educate and protect people I care about by handing out condoms.

Last week I watched Fox's special, "Rock the Vote," in which they declared "this is a show about power."

This program was designed to ignite a fire inside our generation of the 25 million 18-24 year olds (note how I stress this fact) to get out and register to vote.

Christian Slater had a fantastic theory on the power we could have.

"We're checking out the work force...You hired them, you fire them," he said.

Madonna, as the Diva, embodied what most of us have relied on to be excused from voting, the "too much of a nuisance to do it"- ploy.

"Got to have the right clothes and hair, just to put one thing down on a piece of paper."

She's right—what a let down. But how worse will it be when the right to vote is taken from us because "those kids never did it anyway. Let's be ecological and save the paper."?

I am not one for preaching on this subject, but this condom hype really got me thinking about how monitored we are, like kindergartners.

We must be giving them (who is 'them'? If you don't know, you must be in kindergarten) the power somehow. Through a hole in the roof, maybe? The Beatles wrote a song called "Fixing a Hole" and partial lyrics go as follows:

I'm fixing a hole where the rain gets in,
and stops my mind from wandering,
Where it will go?
It really doesn't matter— "If I'm wrong, I'm right."

It does matter, there is no wrong or right in opinions. I think we need to fix that hole.

Are they going to eventually stop our minds from 'wandering'? Why do we feel that we don't count? When are we going to be taken seriously?

When we get serious about the power we hold. So, blow off the oppressive and vote for our own.

We won't do it for the generation behind us, because we are selfish. Unfortunately, our generation is somewhat like Menudo—we graduate at a particular age, and cannot continue until death to support ourselves, like the AARP (American Association of Retired Persons) can, but we can still be selfish and do it for ourselves right now. Wow! This could be our Purpose!!

We could actually prove that we have the power, instead of mumbling, "yeah, we could, but it'd never happen in reality."

It's our generation, we can do what we want with it. I don't prescribe to all that 60's crap about movements and love-in's, but I do know we are trailing after the 80's business-lover's generation and we have a head on our shoulders.

We have learned to balance our fun with responsibility and awareness. We might have an edge with that trait under our belt. After all, there are 25 million of us.

And please, if you don't do anything else, use that condom.

Longwood or Los Angeles? Sometimes Its Hard To Tell

By Trey Piersall
Associate Editor

Ask most non-minority students if they have ever witnessed a racial incident on campus and the response will probably be "no."

I underlined "most" because there are obviously some students who not only witness, but cause these same racial incidents.

These individuals obviously do not mistreat white students. As a result, we see very few cases of racism.

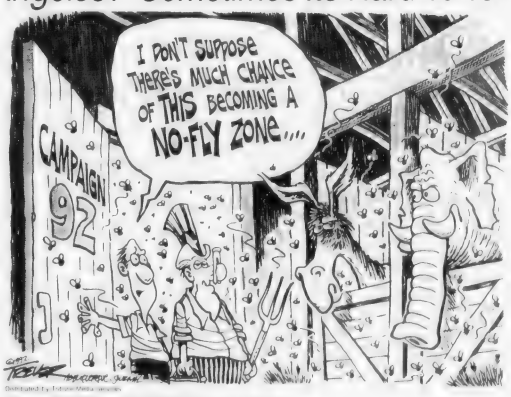
When I first read Mr. Richard's opinion piece in last week's issue of the Rotunda, I was shocked at the overt racism which students of color are subjected to on a college campus.

My next emotion was guilt about the fact that I hadn't even realized the scope of the problem. I consider myself "in touch" with events on campus. To be so shocked, I must not be nearly so "in touch" as I thought.

I was not shocked, however, that campus police participated in such racism. I can understand how one who could not even get a job on a real police force might feel the need to oppress successful young people.

The next emotion that I dealt with was anger. Why hadn't I been there to do something? I don't know what I would have done, except maybe get arrested, which wouldn't have solved anybody's problems.

Finally, I felt confused and frustrated. Mr. Richard stated that "if you're not part of the solution, then you're part of the problem." This is undoubtedly true, but how can you fight an enemy you never see?



I decided that my first step would be simply to tell people how I feel, thus the writing of this article.

I had assumed that college campuses were one of the few places that were safe from racism.

If I'm wrong, then something must be done.

I don't like feeling shocked, angry, and confused, especially when I don't know what to do about it. I wish that I had a solution, but I don't. I can't believe that in 1992 all we can do is talk about the problem.

But if the sad truth is that this is our only recourse, then let's do it. I hope that other students will follow Mr. Richard's example and talk (or better, shout) about what is happening to and around them.

Punk Returns

Sonic Youth- dirty
Geffen Records, 1992
price: $15.99

They're back. Those punk legends ,Sonic Youth, with their eighth album, dirty. This album was all that could be expected and more, it's grungy and melodic with that kind of hypnotic audible chaos that is a Sonic Youth staple.

The quality of this album surpasses their previous releases on both SST and Enigma; a result of the recording and engineering team of Butch Vig and Andy Wallace, of Nirvana and Smashing Pumpkins fame. Anyone who would accuse Sonic Youth of selling out has either lost touch with reality or never liked them in the first place.

No matter how good the recording however, it comes down to the musicians to make a good album, and this is most certainly the case here. Both the production and the material are incredible works of (if I may) art.

The music is straight, head-on Sonic Youth, with dueling guitarists Thurston Moore and Lee Renaldo going for that unrelentless corruption of your ears with a solid wall of sonic booms. Then of course there is Kim Gordon (of who many in the underground world would like to have bear their child) croons to the listener on subjects from the way bosses take advantages of their secretaries to classic themes as old as summer romance.

This is a great album, check it out by calling WLCX (395-2475) and requesting it. To new listeners, it may take a while to go down but once it does it goes oh-so-nicely. And to old fans, I've got my ticket for the October 11, Brown's Island show, how about you. This album would definitely make Grandma's ears bleed.

FASHION

By Duri-Kyi Hicks
Staff Reporter

Some days the average college student gets up in the morning and searches among the Girbaud jeans, shirts by Willi-Wear, and black Doc Martin shoes, simply cannot find anything to wear.

Must be time to go shopping, too bad the bank account suggests otherwise.

So...what is an average looking, suave young man who is fairly fashion- conscious supposed to do? Well, let me offer a bit of helpful advice. Besides, that cute girl in your English class is never going to even notice your existence.

So being a most generous person, I am going to suggest some tips for you (and your wardrobe).

Faded jeans with a worn-out flannel shirt is definitely not the way to go. Faded jeans, however, with a tasteful shirt in rayon or silk, with a matching pair of shoes is much more appropriate. If you haven't been to the barber lately, find a friend, wear a hat, or shave your head (which is very fashionable up north.

That is all for this week, next time we'll talk about getting your roommate to do his laundry, but until then, "never wear burgundy socks with your Docs".

WLCX Loses Hours

By Duri-Kyi Hicks
Staff Writer

WLCX, Longwood's campus radio station is undergoing format changes.

The recent conflicts occurring between the station and academic officials is being resolved. The college D.J.'s had a speaker Thursday night during their weekly meeting; Ms. Nancy Haga, Chair of the Theatre and Speech Department, located in Jarman Hall.

Haga spoke to the group of D.J. 's regarding incidents which allegedly happened at the radio station.

Reports of vandalism, people on the roof of Jarman, obscene language, distasteful and loud music, unruly behavior, drinking and drug use which have never been, and will never be tolerated, not only by campus officials but also by the public as well had been alleged.

It was also stated at this meeting that the new sign-off time for the station will be 12:00 a.m. instead of the previous 2:00 a.m..

It was also announced that if any more unacceptable conduct was exhibited by the members of the station's staff, it could be taken off of the air.

For the most part these decisions were met with an overall sense of cooperation on the part of the WLCX staff attending the meeting.

Meat Whistle Longwood's Own

By Joe Nagy
Staff Reporter

It looks as if Longwood may finally have it's own rock band. They're called Meat Whistle for now, though names like Asstec Love Flute and Mighty Dog have recently been suggested.

If you haven't been able to figure it out already from their names, they're not your average rock band. When asked to describe their style of music, Lang Smith, the band's co-founder and lead guitarist, gets a little confused.

"No, we're not a progressive band. And also we're not "alternative music,'" he says. A good compromise would be to call them a high-energy mix of everything.

Lang agrees. "We play covers on songs from the Bee Gees 'Staying Alive' to Stevie Wonder's 'High Ground'," he says.

Most people haven't had a chance to catch on of Meat Whistle's rare-but-famous concerts which took place around campus last year.

Their most interesting (and controversial) concert was held on third floor Frazer late last February. They were still playing without a drummer (thank God), and Smith remembers it as being like " a really wild Longwood version of MTV's Unplugged. We were pushed up in the corner of this suite, playing acoustically, but the crowd went crazy."

"A couple of Alpha Sigs had to move off campus for that party," Smith continued, "but everyone we talked to later said it was worth it. We all became great friends, and later [the band members] played at the Alpha Sig Pig Roast. That concert went even better, and [by then] we even had a drummer."

Their new drummer is David Choi, the do-it-all Delta who excels at skateboarding, and is also well-known on the Longwood art scene. Choi has helped the band stay focused, though at times he has come close to leaving.

Meat Whistle is also fortunate in their second lead guitarist, Ben Graham, a soft-spoken man who always seems to be in good mood.

But the brightest addition to the group has to be its new and intense bassist, Pat Vermillion. Vermillion gets the most out of his 600 watt amp, concentrating on his fast, 'pluck,' style of play.

The band's lead singer is co-founder George Thomas, whose stage presence is almost overwhelming.

Thomas and Smith, both Farmville natives, founded the band in high school, basically as a diversion. The beginnings of the band involved more than just practice, however.

Smith recalls that "after practice we used to get an old pocketbook in tie fishing string around it. Then we would hide in the woods, and the people walking or driving by would come up to the purse and SWOOSH! We would pull the hell out of the string."

Meat Whistle has come a long way since then. They now have five fairly dedicated members, some decent equipment, and a place to rehearse. They are next scheduled to play on October 23 in Alpha Sig's chapter room in Frazer, but if you can't wait that long, you can catch theme almost every weekday, practicing hard above Caryn's Bridal Shop on Main Street. Their long evening jams are already attracting a small cult following. So don't be shy — George might even let you scream a couple of lines of Let Me Stand Next To Your Fire" into the mike.

Beatles' 'Sgt. Pepper' taught the bands to play

BY KIRK NICEWONGER

The Beatles' "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" (1967) may be the most important rock record ever made, but not because of its technological innovations or even its quality. "Sgt. Pepper" is pivotal because - thanks to its audaciousness and thematic unity - in one stroke it overthrew the tyranny of the three-minute single and established the album as the essential creative unit of rock.

On Sunday, Sept. 27, The Disney Channel airs "The Making of Sgt. Pepper," a fascinating song-by-song walkthrough of the album, hosted by producer George Martin and highlighted by interviews with surviving Beatles George Harrison, Paul McCartney and Ringo Starr.

As the man who translated many of the Beatles' musical fancies into reality, Martin has the gruff but endearing demeanor of a slightly scary but ultimately beloved teacher. ("When I first met them," Martin says bluntly of Lennon and McCartney, "they really couldn't write a decent song. 'Love Me Do' was the best they could give me.") Using original tapes and outtakes, Martin isolates the elements of each song, then shows how they were blended. It's a crash course in how songs are constructed.

The Beatles' anecdotes are terrific: Ringo tells one particularly great story about why he insisted John and Paul change the lyrics of "With a Little Help From My Friends" from "Would you throw tomatoes at me?" to "Would you stand up and walk out on me?" And Paul cheerily admits that he "nicked" musical ideas for "Sgt. Pepper" from the Beach Boys' "Pet Sounds" album.

But perhaps the most compelling reason to watch "The Making of Sgt. Pepper" is that it affords a glimpse into that Golden Zone that artists are sometimes lucky enough to visit, a place in which everything they see and experience, no matter how mundane, is alchemized into a shining inspiration. Lennon and McCartney clearly were working out of the Zone at the time of "Sgt. Pepper": "Lucy in the Sky With Diamonds" was inspired by a child's painting, "Being for the Benefit of Mr. Kite" was almost a straight transcription of a circus poster, "Good Morning, Good Morning" arose from a TV commercial for cornflakes, and the great "A Day in the Life" began its own life as a newspaper item.

To anyone interested in "Sgt. Pepper," the Beatles or the creative process itself, "The Making of Sgt. Pepper" is absolutely essential viewing.

THINGS THAT SUCK

THE THEME SONG

Sung to the tune of "My Favorite Things" from The Sound of Music.

Biting on tin foil, dog farts and foot fungus, high impact aerobics, mosquitos that stung us,
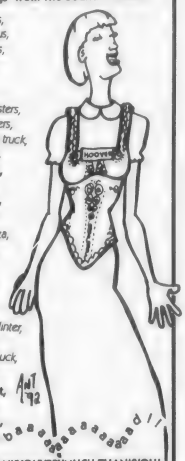
paying the phone bill when its ninety bucks,
these are a few of the things I think suck.



Lyme ticks and Oprah and big oozing blisters, dandruff and back zits and pesky big sisters,
a life threatening bone crushing wreck with a truck,
these are a few of the things I think suck.

When hung-over, when the grades stink,
when I'm feeeeling saaaaad, I simply remember some things that suck worse,
and then I don't feeee! sooo baaaad!

Burning your mouth on a hot piece of pizza, calling her Nancy when her name is Lisa,
taking a gamble and having no luck,
these are a few of the things I think suck.

Hat head and bed head, a big wooden splinter, licking a pole in the middle of winter,
thinking of things that rhyme with the sound uck,
these are a few of the things I think suck.

When the car dies, when the pipes burst,
when I'm feeeeling saaaaad, I simply
remember some things that suck worse,
and then I don't feeee! sooooooooo 'o

A DISPATCH FROM SPY MAGAZINE

Meet the Nobelists! This Month's Question:

What's the best way to stop hiccups?

Melvin Calvin, 1961 Nobel Prize in Chemistry: "My mother used to say, 'Take a drink of water,' and it works. And the reason is that when you're drinking water, you can't hiccup....It'll get into your lungs....It's very bad—it hurts."

Howard Temin, 1975 Nobel Prize in Medicine: "That, unfortunately, is not my field—I am a virologist....It's probably like treating a cold—if you don't treat it, it lasts six or seven days, and if you do treat it, it lasts a week."

Leon Lederman, 1988 Nobel Prize in Physics: "Hold your breath? It doesn't always stop it, [but] it may discourage it. Maybe it's inherited genetically....It's certainly a natural inheritance, unless there's a breed of people that are hiccupless, [but] it's a social error to comment on things like that."

David Hubel, 1981 Nobel Prize in Medicine: "I think there are 101 ideas about what to do, and I'm not sure any of them work. I've heard of people who have gone on hiccuping year after year until they get used to it....The immediate cause [is known]—they know the nerve that goes to the diaphragm sort of twitches because the synchronous nerve impulse is coming down....You don't want to hear this!"

Paul Samuelson, 1970 Nobel Prize in Economics: "I think I'd rather have a beta-blocker today than...home remedies, because if you get hiccups for two days, it's very serious. By the way, you're asking a person with many doctorate degrees, but none of them are the useful kind where medicine is concerned."

Richard Taylor, 1990 Nobel Prize in Physics: "There's lots of fancy things...things that just took your concentration....I haven't noticed any particularly efficacious way to handle them."

Kenneth Arrow, 1972 Nobel Prize in Economics: "I think I once put a bag over my head. Hiccups haven't been a major problem."

AN EASY GUIDE TO THE MOST COMMON SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED DISEASES

DESCRIPTION	SYMPTOMS	TREATMENT
AIDS: Nature equipped you with an immune system to fight off infection and disease. The AIDS virus doesn't just attack your body, it destroys that immune system so that your body is more prone to develop diseases like pneumonia or cancer.	Swollen glands in neck, groin or armpit. Night sweats. Unexplained tiredness, and/or weight loss. Persistent diarrhea.	Symptoms can be treated, but to date, no cure exists for the AIDS virus itself. At the present time, once AIDS is established, it is 100% fatal.
CHLAMYDIA: Chlamydia (an infection of the urinary tract and/or vagina) is the most common STD in U.S. This is because it has few or no symptoms. As a result, it is possible to have the disease for some time without knowing it.	GENERAL SYMPTOMS Unusual amount, odor, or color of discharge from penis, vagina, or rectum. • Burning or pain when urinating. • Burning or itching around vagina, tip of penis, or rectum. • Skin rash or sores on or around the sex organs or mouth. • Swollen glands. • Pain in lower abdomen.	Chlamydia can be cured with antibiotics from your doctor.
GENITAL WARTS (HPV): More than 60 different kinds of Genital Warts are associated with the Human Papilloma virus (HPV). Since they can be passed on easily, and in some cases have been linked to cancers of the reproductive system, you should have them treated as soon as possible. Females should have yearly Pap tests.		Even though warts can be removed by chemicals, cryotherapy (freezing), or laser treatment, the virus can stay with you for life.
HERPES: Herpes is a virus which infects the surface of the skin and which can be a threat to babies born from infected mothers. Although symptoms can be treated, future outbreaks can be expected at times of stress.		Prescription drugs can treat the symptoms but Herpes cannot be cured.
SYPHILIS: This disease can affect any part of your body or your unborn child. Left untreated, it becomes a serious disease indeed: between 10 and 25 years after the initial infection 25% of all sufferers can develop paralysis, heart diseases, severe brain damage ... or even die.		In its early stages, Syphilis can be cured with antibiotics from your doctor. If you think you are infected, get a blood test immediately (this being the only accurate way to diagnose Syphilis).
GONORRHEA: Left untreated, Gonorrhea can cause sterility in men, pelvic inflammatory disease in women, and arthritis in both. It can also settle in the heart, brain, or spinal cord.		Antibiotics usually cure the disease if diagnosed early.
TRICHOMONIASIS: Trichomoniasis is a disease which causes inflammation of the vagina. Although Trichomoniasis primarily affects women, it can also be carried and spread by men.		Trichomoniasis is cured with prescription drugs.

CAGERS TO PLAY IN FARMVILLE

Seven of the top 10 scorers in the history of Longwood men's basketball plan to be among a group of 21 former Lancer cagers who will play in the sixth Longwood Alumni Basketball Game Saturday at 1:00 in Lancer Hall. The game is open to the public at no charge.

All-time leading scorer Kevin Jefferson ('90), who scored 1,806 points in four seasons, headlines the lineup of former stars. The list includes several members of the 1979-80 Lancer squad which advanced to the Final Four in NCAA Division III. Expected back from the '79-80 squad which finished 28-3, are captain Shack Leonard, 1,000 point scorers Kenny Ford, Joe Remar and Ron Orr, guard Orlando Turner and forward Thomas (Tee) Alston.

Additonal oldtimers expected back are Longwood Assistant Admissions Director Jimmy Yarbrough ('82), who still holds the Lancer record for most points in a game (46), Bobby Carter and Mike Testa ('83), Dave Strothers ('85) and Adrian Armstrong ('84).

Also set to appear are 1,000-point scorers Lonnie Lewis ('86), and Dale Shavers ('90) plus Greg Holloway ('91) who scored 925 points in four seasons. Other recent standouts coming are Joe Lowe ('92), Billy Dunn and Keith Latimer (1991), Bobby Dobson ('89), Lionell Ogburn ('88), Cumberland's Gary Austin ('90), and Kevin Ricks (1987).

The game will pit players from 1985 and before against standouts from more recent teams. The oldtimers have won the previous five games, the last in February of this year by an 82-77 count. Bobby Carter led the victorious White team to victory over Kevin Jefferson and his Blue team. Carter scored 25 points and Jefferson 20 in last year's game.

The contest is being sponsored by the Longwood College Lancer Club and the Office of Alumni Affairs. Unfortunately, former Lancer star Jerome Kersey will not be able to appear. Kersey is currently involved with the NBA Portland Trailblazers preseason camp. Kersey starts his ninth pro season in November.

LANCER GOLFERS BEAT JACKETS, SAINTS

By Steve Gavin

Longwood's mens golf team defeated Randolph-Macon and Marymount in match play last Tuesday at Hanover Country Club in Ashland. The Lancers' score of 305 easily topped Randolph-Macon's 319 and Marymount's 368. The victories gave Steve Nelson his 100 and 101 victories as Longwood coach.

The Lancers were led by freshman Eric Levin. Levin's 72 was the low score of the day, giving him medalist honors in his first college competition.

Steve Crute shot par on the last twelve holes and finished with a 75. Crute and senior Frank Davide, who shot 82 Tuesday, have been named captains of the team.

Rounding out the scoring for the Lancers were juniors Shawn Moore 77, and Jimmy Ward 81. Mark Strawderman shot an 84.

"I told them before the match that if they shot 305 I'd be happy", said Nelson. "It seems as if we've gotten off to a pretty good start."

Nelson has also achieved the 100-victory plateau as a wrestling coach, although not all of those victories have come at Longwood. The coach now has a 101-44-2 mark in match play with golf, and a 122-127-1 mark in 17 years with wrestling. He coached wrestling five years at Chowan before coming to Longwood in 1980.

The Lancers continue their season Thursday in a triangular match, facing Hampton and Hampden-Sydney at the Longwood Golf Course.

Lady Lancer Field Hockey Drops To 4-3-1

By Greg Prouty

Longwood's NCAA Division II field hockey squad saw its record slip to 4-3-1 on the season after suffering a 3-0 loss at Richmond Saturday afternoon and a 0-0 double-overtime tie at Wake Forest last Tuesday. Both Richmond and Wake Forest are NCAA Division I institutions.

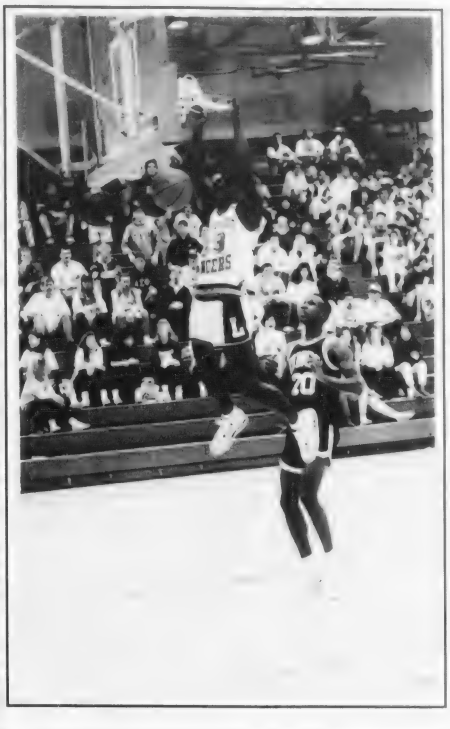
Longwood was ranked fourth in the Sept. 23 NCAA Division II South Region field hockey poll. Shippensburg (4-1), Lock Haven (3-1), and Millersville (2-2), all Pennsylvania schools, are ranked ahead of LC. Ironically, another Pennsylvania school, Bloomsburg (6-0), is currently ranked first in the North Region.

At Richmond, the Lady Lancers were out-shot an incredible 58-21, including an 8-1 margin in penalty corners favoring the Spiders. Junior Missy Moran led Longwood with five shots. Sophomore goalkeeper Sara Hogan had a career-high 20 saves in the net for Longwood.

"Sara had an outstanding game for us," commented coach Sandy Bridgeman. "Richmond just played a very good game against us."

In Winston-Salem, N.C. last Tuesday, the Lady Lancers and Deacons battled for 90 scoreless minutes, including two 15-minute sudden death overtime periods.

The Lady Lancers were outshot 32-15 by the Deacons, but thanks to some good defense and 15 saves by Hogan, Bridgeman's team was able to leave town with the deadlock.



Bridgeman noted the contest was played on astroturf, which Longwood only plays on a couple times each year. The pace of play is quicker on the turf, and the Lady Lancers didn't make the transition very well.

Sophomore Mari Willen and senior Denise Hanley led the attack with five and four shots on goal respectively, while senior Tonia Harris and junior Anita Warford each had a defensive save. Bridgeman also mentioned the defensive play of senior Kim Hasson .

Through eight games, Willen and Moran lead Longwood in scoring with 11 points each. Willen has five goals and one assist, while Moran has three goals and five assists. Hanley follows with two goals and one assist for five points.

Defensively, Warford has three defensive saves, while senior Susie Lindsay and sophomore Ashley Bolen each have two. Hogan now has 80 saves in the net for a save percentage of .889, allowing just 1.3 goals per game.

Longwood returns to action this Wednesday hosting another Division I school. This time the Lady Lancers face intrastate rival Radford at 4:00 on Barlow Field in their home opener. It's the first of four-consecutive home contests.

Walsh's wiles should produce Cardinal wins

BY CHRISTOPHER HULL

Don't tell Bill Walsh that you can't go home again. Because that's exactly what the former head coach of the San Francisco 49ers was counting on when he agreed to return to Stanford University to coach football this fall.

Stanford visits Notre Dame Saturday, Oct. 3, for a game with Lou Holtz's Fighting Irish. It airs live on NBC.

Bill Walsh

Citing a desire to return to the camaraderie of the game - without the relentless pressure to win that had become inescapable with the 49ers - Walsh ended his three-year retirement to return to the job he gave up 13 years ago for a shot in the pros.

Walsh's success in San Francisco is a matter of record. The Niners had finished out of the playoffs for six straight years when he took the job in 1979; three years later, he had won his first of three Super Bowls with the team that came to define NFL excellence in the 1980s.

The 60-year-old coach has inherited an ideal situation at Stanford: The Cardinal returns 18 starters from last year's 8-4 team that finished tied for second in the tough Pac 10 and played Georgia Tech in the Aloha Bowl. If not for the presence of the Washington Huskies in the conference, Stanford could be favored to make its first trip to the Rose Bowl since 1972.

Four faces from Walsh's successful 49ers teams have joined his coaching staff: Tom Holmoe (defensive backs), Bill Ring (running backs), Keena Turner (outside linebackers) and Mike Wilson (receivers).

Walsh won't make any guarantees, but he believes that Stanford has the potential to regularly rank among the nation's top 15 teams.

- NBC has the doubleheader and CBS the single game when Week 4 of the NFL season gets under way on Sunday, Sept. 27. But the two biggest matchups of the weekend are the San Francisco 49ers at the New Orleans Saints (TNT, Sunday night) and the Los Angeles Raiders at the Kansas City Chiefs (ABC, Monday night).

In New Orleans, the Saints are looking to repeat as champions of the NFC West, while the 49ers are seeking to reclaim that top spot for the eighth time since 1983.

The Raiders and the Chiefs are renewing a rivalry that dates to the early days of the AFL, and both are contending with the Denver Broncos for the AFC West title. The game marks the second date in a treacherous five-game stretch in which Kansas City plays Houston, the Raiders, Denver, Philadelphia and Dallas.

THE ROTUNDA

ROTC Cadets Excell

By Brian Chapman
Staff Writer

On September 27, about 130 cadets from Longwood, Hampden-Sydney, VCU, and University of Richmond, participated in a number of exercises at Fort Pickett.

Those who participated assembled in front of the repel tower and were given a brief introduction by Lt. Co. Walsh, the officer in charge of the day's events.

After the introduction, the cadets were divided up into squads of ten and assigned to a cadet instructor.

The LRC (Leadership Reaction Course), consists of 18 different obstacles.

At each obstacle, a leader was chosen from the squad and given brief instructions on how to overcome it.

The squads were given limited amounts of resources and had twenty minutes to complete each task.

Some of the scenarios were: escaping from a P.O.W. camp, crossing a chain bridge, and repairing a bridge.

One aspect of the repel tower course consisted of learning how to tie a "Swiss seat," which is the harness a repeller wears.

After the harness was tied, it was checked by either a cadet instructor or Army advisor.

If the "Swiss seat" met requirements, the cadet was sent up the fifty foot high tower to repel off the "Wall" or "Skid."

The "Skid" was an actual helicopter skid and simulated what it would be like to repel from a helicopter.

The third event consisted of assembling and disassembling the M-16 rifle. This is a basic skill required of every member of the Armed Forces.

ROTC is a basic exposure to the military and its inner workings.

If any Freshman or Sophomore is interested, there is no obligation until the Junior year. Scott Custer, the cadet in charge of the ROTC program at Longwood, has recently completed Advance Camp.

Cadet Custer placed in the top ten percent of ROTC cadets nationwide, and two other Longwood cadets placed in the top thirty percent.

Oktoberfest Visitors Relish Festivities

By Erin McCay
Editor in Chief

Longwood students, parents, visitors, and alumni were able to enjoy the perfect weather last weekend which accompanied all of the activities and performances of Oktoberfest.

A multitude of organizations were represented this year, including some new faces on the Longwood Oktoberfest scene.

The harvard red and old gold of Longwood's newest fraternity, Phi Kappa Tau, were seen at one booth.

The Commuter Student Association also made an appearance at its paintball booth, where visitors were given the opportunity to splatter pictures of their "favorite" faculty member or administrator with paint bullets.

Phi Beta Lambda afforded the opportunity for many to fulfill their wishes when they offered as targets some of Longwood's more familiar faces. VPSA Phyllis Mable, SGA President Darrell Wells, RECs Larry Robertson and Mike Herndon, and Rotunda Editor Erin McCay, and others volunteered their time and clean clothes at the business fraternity's pie-throwing booth.

There was a great deal to entertain the guests and students, beginning with the traditional Oktoberfest parade, and including a "klown beauty contest," musical numbers from Little Mary Sunshine, and other performances.

One disturbing note was the theft of a Chi banner from the side of McCorkle. The banner was last seen at 2:00 pm, and had disappeared by 5:00, when it was scheduled to be removed.

Students Boycott University Bookstore

MADISON, Wis. (CPS) - Gay, lesbian and other student activists at the University of Wisconsin are boycotting a bookstore after a lesbian employee was fired in May.

Lois Corcoran, who worked as an administrative assistant at the University Book Store, filed a complaint with Madison's Equal Opportunity Commission, saying that she was fired because she is a lesbian.

John Epple, president of the store, did not return telephone calls to comment on the case. The bookstore is not officially affiliated with the school, but is the closest bookstore to campus, said Sara Oppenheimer, the campus news editor with the Daily Cardinal, a campus newspaper.

Charles Squires, who is co-president of the Ten Percent Society, the school's gay, lesbian, and bisexual student organization, said the boycott so far has been "fairly successful." School began Sept. 2 and activists picketed the store during registration and the first week of classes, Squires said.

"Our campus has 4,000 to 5,000 gay and lesbian students, and it is atrocious that the place discriminates so blatantly," he said. "It's really demeaning."

The boycott has the support of the Wisconsin Student Association, said Amy Friedman, speaker of the Senate. The association represents the school's 43,000 students. "We supported the boycott due to a strong show of support of the student population," Friedman said. "When we have civil rights violations we should support our students."

Most students should be able to purchase textbooks at other book stores, Friedman and Squires said.

Conflict Ensues After Directory Completed

By James Whiteree
Staff Writer

The Longwood Student directory will be out pretty soon. There has been much controversy over whether or not commuter students should be put in the directory.

The controversy stems from the fact that residents pay the expenses of creating the directory, while no money is regularly taken from commuter students's fees to include them in the directory.

Zav Dadabhoy, student development educator and advisor to the Commuter Student Association, stated that the Commuter Student Association believes commuters should be in the directory. According to Dadabhoy, this is necessary because commuters are a large and vital part of the Longwood community.

Currently, there are over 900 commuter students in all, 250 of which live within a few blocks from campus.

The CSA has agreed to put in some of their activity fee money to get the commuters in the directory. This does not seem to be too popular with some members.

Charlotte Shiflett, an officer of the CSA stated "members are upset about having to pay activity fees for what is supposed to be a service provided by the school. The price is too high."

A.C. Russel, Chairman of the CSA, has expressed some concern over this issue. Russel explained that he planned on requesting $300 to $400 from the SGA to pay for the directory. In addition to that amount, however, they would still need about $800 to cover the cost of adding commuter students to the directory.

According to Russel, this would mean that there would have to be 90 pages with 1900 copies, costing approximately $1130.

Russel also expressed concern about the name of the directory. He states "attitude deficiency is the main problem," and that it should be arranged that the Student Directory be called the Residential student Directory.

Russel feels that commuter students feel alienated and that their numbers should be included. Russel, who commutes from Bracy, a town near the North Carolina border, states that if the funds fall through, the CSA will try to create its own commuter student directory.

One of the main problems in dealing with commuter issues, according to Russel, is that two-thirds of the students at Longwood live on campus, which can make it difficult for commuters to be recognized.

According to Rose Hurley, head of Telecommunications, there is a great need to make commuter students a part of the college. In the future, there is a plan to combine the students into one directory, with the residence hall students in one section and the commuter students, including addresses, in another.

The problem for this year is solved.

Greeks Celebrate Next Week

By Tara Confalone
Staff Writer

Greek Week is what over 700 students will be celebrating this week as the Greek Week festivities kick off on Wednesday, October 7, 1992.

According to one member of the greek community, they would like to extend an invitation to all those who would like to attend any of the activities.

On Wednesday, greeks will show a little of that good ol' rock-an-roll action as they lip-sync and "shake that thing" to some popular tunes of the nineties. This event will begin at 9:30 p.m. in Blackwell Dining Hall. The cost for admission is only fifty cents.

Maureen Seering, who is past National President of Delta Gamma, will be speaking Thursday at 1:15 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. She will be addressing the issue of the challenges and opportunities of being Greek.

Just in time for the weekend, the Mosaics will be shaking up the town as they break loose on Lankford Mall Friday, starting at 8:00 p.m.

On Saturday, the greeks try their hands at the Olympics "Longwood style."

All over Lankford mall, the greeks will be participating in obstacle courses, pyramid building, pizza eating, egg tossing, and the most loved activity the balloon sling-shot contest. Not quite the style of Barcelona, but definitely Farmville style.

Monday, after a restful weekend, the Greeks participate in their rendition of Family Feud at 7:00 p.m. in the A, B, C, rooms.

To end the week, the Greek community will be having campus clean-up.

During this traditional activity, each sorority or fraternity is assigned a section of the campus and then together they pick up the trash. They also sweep and rake where it is possible.

Later that evening, in the dining hall, there will be a presentation dinner, where all the fraternities and sororities will introduce their new members. Order of Omega, the Greek leadership and honorary society, will also tap their new members.

NCATE Evaluates Teaching Program

By Mandy Ping
Staff Writer

The National Council for Accrediting Teachers Education (NCATE) will be reviewing the education program from Sunday, October 4, to Tuesday October 6.

Longwood College has adopted the theme "Teacher As A Leader." This theme covers all the knowledge and appropriate teaching skills needed to be a successful teacher.

In addition, this program stresses the importance of professionalism within the classroom as well as outside the classroom.

Planning for instruction, implementing and managing instruction, evaluating and assessing, knowledge of subject, classroom management, communication skills, and professional responsibilities are the key components to quality education.

Education majors learn these leadership skills through general education, subject matter/pedagogy, and field experience.

According to the Teacher as a Leader task force, located in the reference room of the new library, "research data indicates that Longwood College first year teachers are accountable and aware in the classroom."

The study continued, "area superintendents rated Longwood student teachers highest in professional responsibility. Cooperating teachers rated Longwood student teachers highest on personal and professional responsibility. These are positive indications that Longwood College teachers possess leadership qualities."

NCATE will be visiting classrooms and interviewing some students individually. They may ask professional knowledge questions or request personal opinions of Longwood's education program.

The outcome of this visit will determine the opportunities available for education majors when they graduate and begin to apply for jobs.

The members of Chi ask that the person or persons responsible for removing the Chi banner from the side of McCorkle during Oktoberfest please return it to Dr. Gusset. -Thank You, Chi

PERSPECTIVES

AUTUMN IS HERE

It's that time of year again.

As we travel through the countryside, we visually gorge ourselves on the bucolic splendor of the new season. A burnished cascade of autumnal hues blankets both mountain and valley, dazzling in the crisp fall air.

It is a time for family bonding, as father and son work together to ready the yard for the oncoming winter weather, and mother and daughter can ripe vegetables and fruit, gleaned from the family garden.

The fragrance of burning leaves traces the delicate, chilled air, bringing to mind thoughts of every child's favorite holiday. That is Halloween, rife with goblins and ghosts and fun. Jack O'lanterns spread their toothy grins on every front porch and secret hoards of candy are hidden in kitchen cabinets.

After Halloween comes what is perhaps the most beloved of all celebrations: Thanksgiving. Families are lured together by the thought of seeing loved ones, as well as visions of golden roast turkey, fluffy mashed potatoes dripping with melted butter, and steaming, flaky, apple pie with vanilla ice cream, the ideal American dessert. Wives and mothers jostle for elbow room in the kitchen as they struggle to produce a smorgasbord of toothsome temptations, and husbands and fathers enjoy the traditional Thanksgiving afternoon pastime - watching football.

After bowing their heads in prayer, the family delves into the stunning array of food that is included in the traditional holiday fare, resting only when bare bowls and a picked-over carcass are left.

But every day is a holiday during the gentle fall time. One feels at peace with God and nature when strolling through the woods, the only sound being the scampering of squirrels as they ready their hoard of nuts for the arrival of Jack Frost, the hopping of bunnies as they jump at the alien sound of man, and the crackling of fallen leaves under foot.

It is easy to feel one with the season even on campus. Students are forced to shed their summer uniform of shorts and t-shirts and replace it with shoes, jeans and sweaters. It is rather exciting the first time one must don a jacket before going out - a harbinger of winter weather.

To us, autumn has myriad meanings. It is Oktoberfest, with its games, food, friends, and alumni. It is Fall Break, and all the trips home that occur. It is Halloween, and the pleasure of basking in the glow of shining, happy children. It is football, with tailgate parties, cheerleaders, and huddling under plaid blankets on bleachers while cheering your team to victory. And Autumn is beauty. It is the material beauty of the leaves' tawny transformation and rosy cheeked children at play. But it is, more importantly, the beauty of a spirit at rest as it communes with nature in its glory.

All opinions expressed in unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the editorial board. They do not necessarily represent the opinion of Longwood College, its students, staff, administration, or trustees.

Greek or God?

By Chris Young
Staff Writer

My friends and I were meeting for dinner, as we always do at 5:00 p.m., on September 24. We all entered the Blackwell dining hall, and the ladies that were with us set their books and bookbags down on an empty table and we all went to stand in line to get our food.

I must add that the dining hall was not crowded at all that day. In fact, the entire upstairs, except for a few occupied tables, was empty and some tables downstairs were also available.

Two of the ladies came back to our table earlier than the rest of our dining group and set down their trays and were off to get some drinks. Now, in the short time it took for those ladies to go and get beverages, a person who belongs to a fraternity sat down with the ladies' books and food on the table. By that time, I arrived and wanted to know who this person was and what this person was doing at a table which was all ready occupied by books and trays which belonged to someone whom he did not know.

I then proceeded to ask this person whether he knew we were sitting at this table, but he just ignored me. I saw that he was not going to move, so I took my tray upstairs, where I was overwhelmed by the gigantic number of empty tables. I just took the first one I came to.

I came back down to pick up the ladies' books, so they could carry their trays to our undesired, new location. The rest of the group had figured out what had happened, and restrainfully held back as they proceeded upstairs.

Once we all sat down to eat, a few harsh words were tossed around and agreed upon as some more fraternity boys joined their brother to eat, and as if to reward him, they looked up as I was looking down and laughed. We were tempted to dump food on them from our seats, but we were held back by the fear of stooping to their level.

My friends and I are sick and tired of greek organizations who think they own every table in the dining hall. This is not the first time members of a fraternity or sorority have taken advantage of non-greek students and not the first time I have had to move while eating because of a fraternity.

That is why I wrote this article. I am tired of the fraternities thinking they are gods of the campus. I ask a question to all students, greek and non-greek -- why do greek organizations do such things?

Pot in the 90's: It's Not Just For Smoking Anymore

By P.J. Gillis

The past few weeks has seen the formation of another special interest group in the Farmville area. BACH, the Business Alliance for Commerce in Hemp, has set up a chapter on the Longwood campus. Although not yet officially recognized by the administration, confidence within the organization is high that their voice will be heard.

Said the group's co-founder and president Tommy Birchett, "Our purpose is to educate people about the many uses of the hemp plant, most of which people are unaware of."

As to the many uses of hemp, Jack Herer, author of The Emperor Wears No Clothes, lists thirteen distinct uses. Among these are: textiles and fabrics, fiber and pulp paper, rope, twine and cordage, biomass energy [fuel], medicine, food oils and protein, and building materials and housing. If this plant is so versatile, then we must ask ourselves why was it made illegal? This is a perplexing question, one for which the answers are vague and contradictory at best.

One of the answers is inarguable: hemp produces marijuana. Marijuana is classified by the government as a Schedule I controlled substance, which means the drug has "no accepted medical use."

This is where government agencies start to contradict each other, because according to a 1989 forty-six page report by Robert C. Bonner, a DEA administrator, "beyond doubt, the claims that marijuana is medicine are false, dangerous and cruel."

Mr. Bonner goes on to say that long time users risk "serious side effects" as well as "cancer, glaucoma, multiple sclerosis, and other diseases."

However, Mr. Bonner neither offers nor provides any evidence or documentation to support his claims. This leads us to the contradiction, because according to a study done by DEA administrative judge Francis L. Young in 1988 "...marijuana in it's natural form is one of the safest therapeutically active substances known to man.".

Judge Young reached this conclusion after weeks of hearings, which included the testimony of doctors and of patients undergoing marijuana treatment. Mr. Bonner refutes this finding by stating that "any mind altering drug that produces euphoria can make a sick person think he feels better."

But making someone "think" they feel better is the idea behind placebos, a medical practice of giving patients "sugar pills" in lieu of actual medical treatment, something doctors have done for years.

By this argument, marijuana may have a legitimate medical use, but studies point to that there may be more to it than being simply a placebo. The biggest problem surrounding the medical marijuana issue is that the quality of the research is very poor, because of a 1976 governmental ban on marijuana research.

Other reasons for the prohibition of hemp and marijuana stem from the 1930's. Much of the blame for the bad image associated with this plant goes to William Randolph Hearst.

Hearst and his method of "yellow journalism" brought marijuana use among Mexican- and African-Americans into the public eye.

Playing on the public's fear and prejudices of these minority groups, Hearst portrayed them as "demons, under the influence of marijuana, playing anti-white 'voodoo-satanic' music (jazz)..."and"...marijuana crazed Negroes raping white women." Through constant repetition of these themes, Hearst managed to sway public opinion to the thought that marijuana and marijuana smokers were a "menace" and that their "evil ways" needed to be stopped to preserve the American way of life.

But what Hearst meant by "the American way of life" included a strict set of Apartheid laws. Another of the factors that led to prohibition was industrial.

It was in 1937 that DuPont patented his sulfuric acid process for making paper from wood pulp. Over the next 50 years this process was to account for more than 80% of DuPont's business. If not for hemp prohibition, 80% of DuPont's business would not have come to be.

This is because the process of making paper from hemp is less expensive, easier, and requires fewer chemicals. Seeing their future profits in jeopardy, DuPont and Andrew Mellon, his chief financial advisor, met with Hearst Paper Manufacturing. They held a series of secret meetings in which they began a conspiracy that marked the end of legal cannabis hemp.

For the first time in the 8,000 year relationship between man and hemp, there are laws that forbid the cultivation, use or sale of hemp. From 1631 until the early 1800's in the Americas, cannabis hemp was acceptable as legal tender cash. It was even possible to pay your taxes with it, this was all in order to entice American farmers to grow more hemp.

In Virginia from 1763 to 1767, farmers were jailed for not growing hemp in times of shortage. In the 1800's cannabis hemp was one of the chief cash crops of the South. So after sharing such a long and profitable association with this plant, a total prohibition seems strange. But the question remains, what does hemp offer that makes it such an attractive crop?

In our society we rely heavily on non-renewable natural resources. In less than 100 years of use of crude oil and it's by-products, we have drained vast underground oceans. We have also destroyed huge expanses of timberland. It is obvious that these resources will not hold out against our voracious appetite, we must find new sources to supply our energy and material needs.

Hemp is one of the alternatives. The pro-hemp groups (such as BACH) claim that the hemp plant could once again play a vital role in the fulfilling of these needs. They also offer that one acre of hemp can produce as much paper as four acres of forest, hemp is also an annual plant that grows an average of sixteen feet in a season.

Another claim is that by planting 6% of land in the United States with hemp, that it could supply the 75 quadrillion billion BTUs of energy needed to supply the nation in a year. If these claims are accurate, than hemp is indeed one of our future possibilities.

This brings back the question of marijuana and it's recreational use (or abuse). The startling statistic is that, in recorded medical history, not one person has died from smoking marijuana. This is in comparison to the staggering number of people that die from alcohol (350,000+), tobacco (300,000+), or even aspirin (180-1000).

Approximately the same number of people are jailed each year for smoking marijuana (500,000+), as die from alcohol and tobacco use. There have been no comprehensive studies to prove that marijuana smoking is detrimental. In fact, Scientific American suggests that "...the brain produces a natural cannabinoid-like substance." In light of this information, it seems likely that we have witnessed another bout of "yellow journalistic" aimed at cannabis hemp.

Organizations, such as BACH, try to promote awareness of the hemp plant in hopes that, upon the public will see the positive aspects, and not just the propaganda, surrounding the hemp plant. As the facts seem to suggest, this prohibition is unnecessary and perhaps even harmful to both the economy and the environment.

BACH member Pete Gillis distributes hemp awareness literature at the Amelia County Fair.

SGA Member Dislikes Rotunda

Editor, Rotunda:

Because I am a freshman, I do not know the history of the Rotunda. However, so far I have been disgusted by it.

In the first issue, you plastered the front page with the headline "SGA Besieged By Conflict." Because I was already involved in the SGA, this did not scare me off. However, I know many freshmen who were scared off by it. Instead of greeting the new students with some good news about Longwood, you chose to attack the Student Government.

The second week you gave everyone a condom and told us to "just use it." You even got Longwood into the national news. Not for being such a good school, but for allowing condoms to be dispensed in the newspaper.

And finally this week, you publicized the salaries of all of the faculty and administration. I know this is public information, but why publicize it so? If someone wanted to know this, they could have gone and looked it up for themselves.

All of these articles seem to me to be nothing more than publicity stunts. You rarely bother to tell about the good things going on around campus, only the bad, publicity-grabbing ones. Stop being a tabloid and just try to be a good newspaper.

Beth Baden

Faculty Support for Newspaper Content

This is my third year teaching at Longwood College, and until the past week, controversial issues were blanketed in silence (with the exception of the small protest of the Rodney King verdict last semester). However, the silence was shattered last week following the distribution of the condom-containing issue of the Rotunda. For those students who are unaware, this innocuous event has created quite a stir among the administration. The editor of the paper and her staff have been accused by some Longwood administrators of being "yellow journalists" and "irresponsible" for placing a free condom in the newspaper. This "incident" has been reported in several articles in the Richmond Times Dispatch.

The "SEX" headline sprawled across the front page certainly caught the reader's attention, but that does not make the staff "yellow journalists." Every newspaper must have a readership to survive; every newspaper prints "eye-catching" headlines. Was the headline and enclosed condom a tactic to elicit greater readership? Sure. Is that poor journalism? No, that is simply marketing the newspaper toward a student population.

Faculty and administrators often complain about students being irresponsible. We want students to become more "responsible" drinkers, scholars, and citizens. The free condom provided in the paper was supposed to be a tangible reminder to readers to be responsible about sexual activity. Although condoms are not one hundred percent effective in preventing either pregnancy or sexually transmitted diseases, they certainly provide more protection than sex without the "device." Students' failure to use a condom is the irresponsible behavior about which we should be concerned.

More importantly, most students are legally adults, with most of the rights and responsibilities accompanying that status. Students, regardless of age, have the right to free speech, which the newspaper staff has exercised. Students also have the right to participate in electing our local and national leaders. Students on this campus are given the responsibility of defending this country. It was not so long ago that Deans' offices were adorned with red, white, and blue ribbons in remembrance of our students away fighting in the Persian Gulf war. If students are adult enough to be killed in the line of duty, they are certainly adult enough to receive a free condom in a newspaper.

LAFF Welcomes All

Editor, Rotunda:

This is to correct an assumption made in the September 14 issue by Jennie Fennell in her article introducing the two new special interest halls. We at LAFF, Longwood Alcohol Free Floor, invite all students here at Longwood to our various activities. Her statement "anyone who does not drink alcohol is invited to these parties" creates a bias that we will not uphold. As of yet, there are also only fifteen members of our hall, though we are hoping to quickly expand.

Student Activities Overlooked

Editor, Rotunda:

I am writing in response to your September 28, 1992, publication of the Rotunda. I am appalled by the blatant waste of space in the paper. I frankly couldn't give a piss in the wind about who makes what at this school, many of your "facts" were incorrect anyway, and if I really wanted to know, I could have researched them myself. However, that is not the focus of my concern.

You managed to spend so much time and space researching and printing salaries that many large events on campus which should have been the focus of your paper were overlooked. What weekend, which is the most popular weekend at Longwood, was forgotten? Oktoberfest perhaps? Ring a bell? Our school spends so much money on this weekend to bring special events and not a single column was written. In last week's paper's Opinion section, your editorial board declared that "to the Rotunda, the college is not Dr. Dorrill, Phyllis Mable...It is the students who are Longwood. It is they for whom we have primary concern." If your concern is for the students, why don't you publicize the things we are concerned with — our events. The faculty's salaries are in public record and are accessible to us.

One major thing that was excluded from the paper is the production of Little Mary Sunshine, which Longwood students, over 100 of them, have spent four hard weeks of preparation on, and which Longwood College has spent thousands on in production costs, including hiring a professional actress/dancer/choreographer to direct and a professional costumer to design, both of whom teach classes at Longwood.

It is your job to make known campus events, all of them. Little Mary Sunshine received no publicity, and we would like to thank you. It is really nice to know that your T.V. directory and your inclusion of "Things That Suck" are deemed by you to be more important than Oktoberfest and all of its activities. I believe that many students would beg to differ. So pat yourself on the back for putting students first, why don't you tell us things that we are paying for (that we really do care about), and that aren't easily accessible. And students, did you know that within your tuition you have already paid to see the theatrical productions? Maybe if you knew about the productions, you could make use of the money you have already spent. Thank you Rotunda for your thorough coverage of relevant campus events.

Thank You, Longwood

Editor, Rotunda:

I am writing to pay a sincere thanks to a very special group of students at Longwood.

These students are primarily Anthropology majors, although some are Sociology, and still others are English majors or from the host of majors offered. As diverse as their interests are, these people share a common bond, that being a keen interest in and, indeed, even a passion for archaeology, as well as a deep respect for Longwood's Archaeology Field School Director, Dr. James W. Jordan.

Recently, a group of these fine people gathered at a local restaurant. Not all were present, for some had obligations, and others had graduated and moved on, yet they were there in spirit. While gathered, this group called to order in the ritualistic manner that befits them, one of their patented administrative meetings, at which time they honored me, wished me well, said many nice and embarrassing things about me, and then sent me on my way to graduate school.

I want to thank these dear friends and close by saying that I hope that I can prove myself worthy of their friendship and their praise, and that if there ever arose an opportunity to work with any of them again, I would readily accept.

With kindest regards and deep sincerity, I am,

Re "Longwood Newspaper Under Fire" (Richmond Times-Dispatch, Sept. 27). Thomas Jefferson wrote "a free and an informed populace are the basis of a free and democratic society."

The college newspaper is an integral part of campus life and academic milieu. At times, the press is going to be controversial—offend, alienate and even infuriate comfortable, illiberal faculty and administrators.

Maintain your integrity, Erin. Don't let the turkeys muzzle your First Amendment promise.

Various Moralities Evaluated

Editor, Rotunda:

What shall we follow, the old morality or the new? The answer determines whether any person or society will fail or succeed. We observe that the "new liberation" has produced a never-ending crop of unwanted, deformed, and addicted children born to unwed parents, and pushing America to moral and financial bankruptcy. Plus untold millions of abortions and a worldwide epidemic of sexually-transmitted diseases and child pornography. Sexual assault affects at least one in four women ad infinitum.

But the "old morality" is also flawed. Many under these systems are denied contraception and other rights necessary for the freedom and dignity of women and children. Integrity and honesty may even become secondary to dogma or cultural arrogance.

It is obvious that both the old legalism and the new liberation have something to offer; but either taken to extremes is catastrophic. We need constraints and freedom, responsibility and space. To capture this healthy balance depends on our view of human nature -- ideally as body, mind, and spirit nurtured by home, school and society, but not forgetting reverence to the Mystery behind it all.

Ann Landers says her most important counsel when problems overwhelm is "look up and pray. God cares for you." And the great Hebrew prophet Isaiah assures us "they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings like eagles..."

Library Fails To Serve Some Needs

Editor, Rotunda,

I went to the new library to check out a book and the book had an available status but was not on the shelf in the general stacks as indicated. I proceeded to the front desk, and they apparently had the book in the basement.

My point is that every time I go to check out a book, I can never find the book I am looking for on the shelf. I tried saving some time by going straight to the front desk, after finding out the status of the book on the computers. The person at the front desk told me to go upstairs to check for the book when all along it was in the basement.

What I want to know is, why does the library keep giving me the "run-around." If there is not enough space on the shelves upstairs, then why was the library so poorly designed? If there is not enough help to move the books upstairs, then why not offer a temporary job to students to do the moving? These are all questions I would like to have answered.

Reality, Not Utopia

Editor, Rotunda:

I am writing in response to the recent waves of controversy created by hurricane Rotunda.

Loosen up, Longwood! Take a step back and remove the proverbial blinders. We do not live in a utopian society, nor do we attend a perfect school.

A newspaper's job is to inform. The information is not always favorable to certain parties; however it is still vital to the public. You do not have to agree with the information or the newspaper's stand, but the information at the very least should excite dormant brain cells into action instead of painting a pretty picture to satisfy the ruling class.

The condom issue raised eyebrows, and gasps could be heard nationwide. Give me a break!

Face it folks, most college students are going to have sex, because it can be, with the right person, at the right moment, the most incredible and exciting experience; however there are some very real dangers, such STD's and AIDS. If the condom issue saved one life, it is more than worth the controversy it caused.

And what's all the fuss over the publications of salaries? Shouldn't we, as students and tax payers, know how our money is spent? Yes, I think so!

Here's a piece of advice for those of you who's feathers were ruffled by the Rotunda: The articles made you think and reflect on life. Congratulations, Rotunda, on a job well done.

Geography Club Not Just Fun

Editor, Rotunda:

Do you know where Bosnia is located? How about Somalia? Or even Louisiana? You might be asking yourself why the locations of these countries should even matter to me. Well, its important because that is one of the basic elements of geography: place name recognition. Without it, we wouldn't know where we've been, where we are, or where we're going.

Another basic element of geography deals with culture. If we don't know about or understand the ways of life of people who surround us, live in the next state, or much less another country, then how are we to interact in a positive manner?

If you are wondering what I'm trying to get at, it is this. Whether we realize it or not, geography effects our everyday lives. Everything from how my vote will affect the 1992 Presidential Election to how much I will have to pay next year to attend college to the future of race/ethnic relations in this country in light of the L.A. riots.

If this has peaked your curiosity, I invite you to come and see the world from a unique perspective. The interest meeting for the Geography Club will be held Wednesday, October 14 at 3:00 pm in Conference Room 3 at Lankford Student Union. If you are interested, but unable to attend, call Jim at 4078 for more information.

There are many ideas for activities within the club to increase cultural awareness. They include visits to embassies and museums, interesting speakers, witty slide presentations, watching a movie, or playing games with a geography theme.

Longwood Best As It Is

Editor, Rotunda:

To the Students of Longwood:

Do you want Longwood to stay a college or would you like it to become a university?

Many students applied to Longwood for the sole reason of it being a small school.

No one likes to be a number. We want to be known by name. There are other reasons as well, but the major reason is to be an individual, not just another student-- one of 12,000 or more.

Many schools are so large that you could walk on campus all day and not recognize one other person.

Here you at least recognize every other person, every fourth person you can say "hi" to, and every sixth person you stop to have a conversation with.

The close knit community of Longwood is what makes this college so unique. A university does not and cannot carry out traditions as we do.

There are very few large classes besides laboratory classes. The professors know us by name, not social security number.

We, as students, get the extra help needed to make the learning connection. Professors have the desire for all students to be successful and are genuinely interested in our well being.

Parking is already a problem. It would be a disaster if the college were to expand. Lines in the dining hall are outrageous, so another cafeteria would have to be built. This would break up the time students get to visit one another.

The same thing for Pizza Hut pizza. The line is forming before time to eat all the way out the door and into the hallway.

The post office is so tight, students have to take turns to get into the cubby holes to open their mailbox. Could you imagine what kind of lines we would run into if Longwood was to become a university?

Longwood is strong and has been such a success because of its small community, family-like atmosphere.

So many schools are expanding that it would be in the best interest of Longwood and the students (faculty, too) to be traditional by staying just like it is now and forever.

ENTERTAINMENT

Stage By Teresita Edwards

On September 30, 1992, Little Mary Sunshine opened at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

The story is set in the Colorado Inn, high in the Rocky Mountains. These people are so high in the Rocky Mountains it would not be hard to believe that everyone's brain has been affected by the thin mountain air.

The set was the first aspect of the play that caught the audience's eye.

The stage was filled with flowers, some of which danced with the music. Also on the stage was a totem pole, and an old-fashioned white cottage that was beautiful.

The set crew, managed by Carla Crawley, should be proud.

The music was memorable, and Ann Renee Heim has a beautiful voice and a super German accent. The musical portion of the play, directed by Nancy Sherman was marvelous.

As for the play itself, it opened with a few words in the Indian language, by Chief Brown Bear, played by Robinan Settle.

The next scene involved the forest rangers, who have the life threatening job of taking care of the forest around the Colorado Inn.

Life around this place seems too simple to consider their jobs a life threatening one (that was suppose to be the joke).

The characters in this play were supposed to be really simple minded. They were saying all the right words, but really weren't being silly enough to make the audience realize that they were not serious.

This was suppose to be a farce, an exaggerated comedy. Where was the exaggeration? This play was supposed to be so absurd, and so ridiculous that one couldn't help but laugh.

There were a number of instances where the viewer could see that the play, as well as the main character, Little Mary Sunshine, could have been enhanced by more exaggeration of the characters. This lack of exorbitant behavior is a key factor in making this type of play funny.

The key, sorry to say was not found in time to unlock the door to the audience's funny bone.

PAGES By The Reverend T. Birdscheidt

The Abolition of Work and Other Essays, Bob Black (Loompanics Unltd.).

Bob Black began making a name for himself when he started constructing and distributing a number of one-page rants, brags, manifestos, and lists.

Even within such an unknown and ignored genre where uniqueness is very common, Black's work still manages to stand out. He uses the best talents of the lunatic fringe thinkers with a deadly combination of humor and seriousness to express himself in a biting and memorable way.

"No one should ever work." Thus begins "The Abolition of Work." In this essay, Bob Black calls work (which he defines minimally as "forced labor" and "compulsory production") "the source of all misery in the world."

He proposes that it be replaced with play, which he describes as "festivity, creativity, conviviality, commensality, and art." In addition to this essay, the book includes over thirty more essays, rants, speeches, reviews, and lists of statements, puns, questions, and one-liners. Some of the pieces included are "These on Groucho Marxism," "Ass(Holism)," "Let Us Prey," and "Anarchism and Other Impediments to Anarchy."

The Abolition of Work and Other Essays is refreshing and entertaining, not only because of its wonderfully strange humor, but also because the obscure, often ignored, subject matter is approached and handled by the author in an unusual and challenging manner. It is one of the best books I have ever read, and it should be at the top of your reading list.

TUNES INXS Album Shows Potential By Chris Young

INXS - Welcome To Wherever You Are; Atlantic Records

By now, almost everyone who watches MTV or listens to top forty radio has heard "Not Enough Time," the newest release from the Australian group INXS. The song is the first release off of the band's new album, Welcome To Wherever You Are, and is doing quite well on singles chart, as well as getting video air play.

The album, released last month, is the band's third album in as many years.

Although the band's last album was live, it did feature some new music that never received any attention.

This album contains twelve new songs and is their first studio album since X was released in 1990. With the little success of their last two albums, INXS is hoping to regain the popularity they enjoyed with their hit album, KICK.

The first song on the album is entitled "Questions," and throughout the first four songs, the band leaves a question as to whether this album is a flop. However, with the fifth track, "Not Enough Time," the album begins to take off, and by the tenth track, "Back On Line," it is clear that INXS is back on line and has a real chance at having a successful album.

Even with a fair number of good songs, I don't see this album setting any sales records. It will be difficult for this album to chart well because of the five or so songs that are not very good.

However the other half of the album leaves the band will a chance at having some hit singles.

I don't recommend this album for everyone, but fans of INXS's music will enjoy it.

For those of you who don't like INXS, you can feel good about the band for packaging the album in the environmentally conscious "jewel box".

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IF YOU THOUGHT COLLEGE WAS EXPENSIVE, TRY PUTTING YOURSELF THROUGH RETIREMENT.

Think about supporting yourself for twenty-five, thirty years or longer in retirement. It might be the greatest financial test you'll ever face. Fortunately, you have one valuable asset in your favor. Time.

Time to take advantage of tax-deferral. Time for your money to grow.

But starting early is key. Consider this: if you begin saving just $100 a month at age thirty, you can accumulate $192,539* by the time you reach age sixty-five. Wait ten years and you'd need to set aside $227 a month to reach the same goal.

At TIAA-CREF we not only understand the value of starting early, we can help make it possible—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research are already enrolled in America's largest retirement system. Find out how easy it is to join them. Call today and learn how simple it is to put yourself through retirement when you have time and TIAA-CREF on your side.

Start planning your future. Call our Enrollment Hotline 1 800 842-2888.

Kersey's Surprise Visit Nets White Team Win

A surprise visit by Longwood's most famous basketball alum, Portland Trailblazer Jerome Kersey, helped the White team beat the Blue 95-83 Saturday afternoon in the sixth Longwood Alumni Basketball Game in Lancer Hall. It was the sixth victory for the "Oldtimers" (pre-1986 alumni).

Kersey made his first "official" return to Lancer Hall since 1984 a memorable one as Longwood held its Oktoberfest Weekend. The 6-7, 225-pound NBA veteran thrilled a large alumni game crowd by scoring 38 points, 32 in the second half alone. Kersey scored just six points in the first half as the young alumni held a 40-39 edge, but he and former teammate Ron Orr ('83) turned the game around at the start of the second half. Orr ended up with 19 points to back Kersey with 15 of those points in the first half.

Scoring on a variety of follow-shots, dunks and layups, Kersey also banged in three 3-point field goals. After visiting family in Clarksville, Va. Kersey came up for the game Saturday unannounced. Preseason camp for the Trailblazers starts Friday as Kersey begins preparing for his ninth season in the NBA. Portland has made it to the NBA Finals twice in the last three years. He was an All-American at Longwood in the 1982-83 and '83-84 seasons.

Also playing for the White team were Shack Leonard ('82) with 15 points, Orlando Turner ('84) with five, Bobby Carter ('83) with seven, Troy Littles ('84) with two and Jimmy Yarbrough ('82) with nine. Thomas Alston ('82), Harold Hatchett ('83) and Adrian Armstrong ('84) also played.

For the Blue team, Kevin Jefferson ('90) scored 21 points to lead the way, while Joe Lowe ('91) added 14 points, and Keith Latimer ('91) and Kevin Ricks ('87) had 12 each. Bobby Dobson ('89) and Gary Austin ('90) scored six points, Billy Dunn ('91) and Frank Tennyson ('88) had five and Dale Shavers ('90) scored two.

Kersey received awards as the White team MVP and as the alum who traveled the longest distance to play in the game. Jefferson was the Blue team MVP and Yarbrough was honored as the oldest alum playing.

A record total of 19 former Longwood cagers took part in the contest, which will likely be held in the future as a part of the College's Oktoberfest Weekend.

Hockey Team Tops Radford and Catawba

Longwood's field hockey squad won two games at home this past week, defeating Radford 4-3 in overtime Wednesday and handing Catawba a 2-0 loss Saturday. The victories improve the Lady Lancers record to 6-3-1, the most wins for field hockey since the 1989 team finished 6-8-3.

Longwood was still ranked fourth in the Sept. 30 NCAA Division II South Region field hockey poll. Shippensburg, Pa. was ranked first in the South, while Bloomsburg, Pa. was ranked first in the North Region. Bloomsburg defeated Shippensburg 4-0 last Tuesday.

Facing Catawba during the college's Oktoberfest celebration, Longwood played a little flat yet still managed to dominate the action against the Lady Indians. Outshooting the visitors 42-13, Longwood scored a goal in each half in gaining the triumph.

Senior Meyon Puent scored LC's first goal with 8:17 remaining in the opening stanza. Puent's goal came unassisted after she stole a pass and knocked in a hard shot from the left wing. Senior Jenny Wuebker came up with the Lady Lancers other goal with 13:22 left to play off an assist from junior Missy Moran. Sophomore goalkeeper Sara Hogan registered her fourth shutout of the season while coming up with eight saves. Classmate Mari Willen added a defensive save for Longwood.

Last Wednesday, Wuebker knocked in the game-winning goal with just 0:03 left in sudden-death overtime to give the hosts a 4-3 upset victory over visiting NCAA Division I Radford University.

"It's the biggest win for Longwood since I've been here," commented third-year coach Sandy Bridgeman. "We showed a lot of poise, outplaying them from the start. Our defense did a very nice job, especially Anita Warford in checking Radford's top scorer."

Longwood controlled the action from the beginning, yet trailed 2-1 at the intermission as the visitors made the most of their scoring opportunities. An unassisted goal by Moran with 17:41 remaining in the first period was LC's lone goal of the half as Radford took a 2-1 halftime advantage.

The hosts scored the first two goals of the second period to take a 3-2 advantage with 22:13 to play. Longwood's first score came from Willen as she deflected a shot by senior Denise Hanley into the net at the 31:44 mark. The Lady Lancers took the lead on Moran's second unassisted goal of the day from the top of the circle. Radford knotted the score on a penalty-stroke goal with 10:03 remaining to force the overtime.

It looked like a second OT would be needed before Longwood pressed the action in the final minute leading to Wuebker's game-winner off an assist from Moran. It's Longwood's first win over Radford since a 1-0 triumph in 1986. Longwood outshot Radford 39-20, and had seven penalty corners to the vistor's two. Hanley added a defensive save, while Hogan had 13 saves in the net.

Through 10 games, Moran leads Longwood in scoring with five goals and seven assists for 17 points. Willen has six goals and one assist for 13 points, while Hanley has two goals and two assists for six points. Warford has a team-leading three defensive saves and Hogan now has 101 saves for a save percentage of .886, allowing just 1.3 goals per game.

Longwood returns to action Tuesday with a 4:00 contest against Randolph-Macon on Barlow Field.

Lancer Booters Claim Eastern Division Title

Moving its overall mark to 6-4 and its Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association Eastern Division record to 5-0, Longwood's men's soccer team wrapped up a berth in the VISA Playoffs for the seventh time in the last 12 years with a 2-1 win over Mary Washington Wednesday and a 3-1 triumph over Catholic Saturday.

This week the Lancers visit District of Columbia Tuesday for a 3:00 contest and Saturday host Davis & Elkins for their first home game in a month.

Longwood is the regular season champ in the VISA Eastern Division and will host a first round playoff game against the second place team from the Western Divison in November. The top two teams in the Eastern and Western Divisions will compete in the VISA Playoffs.

Ross Johnson, Todd Dyer and Jon Gates scored for the Lancers Saturday in the win over Catholic. Johnson, Greg Russ and Byron Edwards had assists for Longwood. The Lancers were ahead 2-0 at the half. After Catholic scored on a penalty kick, Gates scored with about five minutes left to sew up the victory.

Wednesday afternoon in Fredericksburg the Lancers beat rival Mary Washington 2-1. Longwood got an "own goal" off a shot from Kevin Carey in the first half and Johnson broke a 1-1 tie with about six minutes left in the game as the Lancers beat Mary Washington.

Mary Washington won the shot battle 19-8, but Longwood goalkeeper Taylor Tucker came up with eight saves to slow down the Eagle attack. Mary Washington had given up just seven goals in nine games after Wednesday's contest.

Longwood got its 1-0 lead 37:04 into the game when Carey chipped a ball from the left wing which bounced off an Eagle defender into the net. Mary Washington's Terry Murphy tied the game at 1-1 in the second half. Johnson dribbled down the right flank, faked out two defenders and kicked in the game winner with his left foot at the 84:17 mark.

TAYLOR TUCKER

Paces Lancers To Pair Of VISA Wins

Taylor Tucker Is Player Of The Week

Freshman goalkeeper Taylor Tucker, who helped Longwood's soccer team claim the Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association Eastern Division regular season title last week, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period Sept. 27 through Oct. 4. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

Tucker came up with eight saves in a 2-1 victory over Mary Washington Wednesday and had four in a 3-1 win over Catholic Saturday. The two wins give Longwood a 5-0 mark and first place in the VISA Eastern Division, and assures the Lancers of a berth in the VISA Playoffs in November.

"Tucker saved us against Mary Washington," said Longwood coach Stan Cieplinski. "He had an outstanding game. He was aggressive and commanding and seemed to be in the right place at the right time. On one play he came out of the box and knocked away a potential goal with a diving header. It was his best week of the season."

A graduate of Princess Anne High, Tucker was a co-captain his junior year and captain as a senior. He made honorable mention All-Beach twice.

Baseball Race Exciting

By James Whiteree
Staff Writer

The regular baseball season is winding down, and it looks similar to last season.

The Atlanta Braves, the champions of the National League West, will be playing the champions of the National League East, the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The Oakland A's, who won the Amercan League West, most likely will be playing the Toronto Blue Jays, who hold a 3 game lead with 4 games to go in the American League East.

The matchup between the Pirates and Braves is a rematch of last year's exciting 7 game series, which the Braves won in 7 games. The Braves are on a mission to win the World Series after last years 7 game loss to the Twins.

Atlanta got off to a horrendous start, going 20-27, but went on a 53-18 run in the middle of the season to beaat out the Cincinnati Reds. The Braves' pitching looks very strong going into this series, featuring 20- game winner Tom Glavine, Steve Avery, John Smoltz, and Charlie Liebrandt, combining talents with the strong hitting of Dave Justice and Terry Pendleton.

The Pirates, whose pitching had been very shaky in the middle of the season, look a little better with the additions of Danny Jackson and knuckleballer Tim Wakefield, and their hitting is always a threat as long as Andy VanSlyke and Barry Bonds are in the lineup. This should be a very exciting and intense series worth watching.

The Toronto Blue Jays, if they are able to hold their lead in the American League East, will be looking to get rid of the choke label that has hounded them. This is a much closer team than in years past, and they hope that hitters Dave Winfield and Roberto Alomar catch fire and that Juan Guzman, their young pitcher, along with Jimmy Key and Todd Stottlemyre, perform well enough to get them over the hump.

The Oakland A's, AL West champions, hope to return to the World Series for the 4th time in 5 years. They are not the same team they were before trading Jose Canseco to the Texas Rangers, but they still have some good hitters in Terry Steinbach, Mark Mcguire, and Harold Baines. Their pitching is always strong, with Dave Stewart, Bob Welch, and newcomer Bobby Witt, who is a result of the Canseco trade. If it is the Blue Jays and Athletics in the playoffs, it will, like the National League series, be very exciting and closely contested.

THE ROTUNDA

ARC Flooded During Fire

By Erin McCay
Editor in Chief

On Saturday, October 10, at approximately 3:30 p.m., smoke could be seen billowing out of a second story window in the Academic Residential Community dormitory, better known as ARC.

Students cheered and applauded when the fire trucks arrived on the scene.

The cause of the fire is unknown, but is believed to have started in a student's trash can.

"Smoke was just rolling (out of the building)," said one ARC resident.

Laurence Huddleston, Assistant Chief of the Farmville Fire Department, said that an investigator had been called to look into Saturday's fire and determine the exact cause and damages.

According to Don Winkler, Associate Vice President for Public Affairs, "fire damage was minimal. Most (was contained) in the affected room."

Winkler went on to say that there was extensive water damage.

According to Chuck Gallagher, President of ARC Hall Council, there was some water damage to his room, destroying some of the ceiling's sheet rock.

"I don't know yet how much damage there was," said another ARC resident, Edwin "Speedog" Klebau, who was absent during and immediately following the fire.

"Supposedly, when you entered my room right after the fire, there were a at least few inches of water on the floor. I do know that my rug, a tape player, and a few more personal possessions were damaged."

Other students report losses of clothes, books, personal items, and a word processor.

"I think that if the fire department had gotten here quicker, they might have been able to turn off the water faster, which would have prevented most of the water damage," commented Gallagher.

"But I don't know all the details," he went on to say.

Assistant Chief Huddleston said the official arrival time of the fire department was approximately ten minutes after receiving the call.

Reactions to the fire are mixed.

"We just want to thank the clean up crew for their work," said one ARC resident. "However, I do want to know why it took the fire department about thirty-five minutes to get here. By that time, the whole building could have been destroyed.

According to a number of eyewitnesses, it took the local fire department at least thirty minutes to arrive on the scene.

Chris Eley was studying in his room when the fire alarm began. "We sat outside for twenty minutes before we even realized that there was a real fire," he remarked. "And it took at least half an hour for the fire trucks to show up."

Klebau was also angered by the apparent carelessness of some students. "Smoking (the probable cause of the fire) is a privilege. If they can't handle it, they shouldn't be allowed to do it."

Gallagher took an active role in the clean up of the residence hall. Minutes after the fire occurred, he called the local Domino's Pizza, and told Bob Burke, manager, what had occurred.

"Domino's got here quicker than the fire department," Gallagher commented. Domino's donated ten large pizzas to those working help clean up after the fire. Wal-Mart also gave discounts to some students who were forced to restock after the fire.

This episode has increased concerns among students and faculty about fire safety on all buildings on campus.

"What would have happened if this had occurred in Frazer or Curry, which don't have sprinklers?" questioned Klebau. "Taking into consideration that the fire department took at least forty minutes to get there, this is a major problem."

Klebau also commented on previous problems with ARC's fire alarm system. "The fire alarms didn't even work when we moved in., but they didn't realize it until a student burned something in the ground floor kitchen and the alarms didn't go off."

According to Don Winkler, "the sprinklers (in ARC) did their job," effectively putting out the blaze.

Dr. James Crowl, of the History and Political Science Department, also expressed concern over student safety, both for commuter students and residential students.

"Students who live off campus don't even have smoke detectors," Crowl remarked. He went on to say that he felt that information about fire safety should be disseminated to all students.

When told that VCU is asking for six million dollars to put sprinklers in its academic buildings, Klebau commented "Why can't we get sprinklers in all of our dorms? I'm sure I can't think of any reason they haven't already thought of."

According to SGA President Darrell Wells, tackling the issue of sprinklers in residence halls is not a priority for this semester. "But," he continued, "it is very possible for next semester.

Currently, some phones are still out of order in ARC, and two students have been relocated to another room in that building.

Greek Week Speaker Stresses Goals

By Tara Confalone
Staff Writer

"What you do is not nearly as significant as what you become," commented Maureen Syring during her October 8 Greek Week presentation.

Presently the Assistant Development Director for the Delta Gamma Association, Syring is also serving as an alternate to the National Panhellenic Council, of which she is the Mid-America Area Coordinator for Alumnae Panhellenics. In the past she has served Gamma Delta on the international level as Vice-President of membership, as well as in the role of President.

Syring announced that 98% of the student population are not involved in greek activities. According to Syring, the remaining two percent view greeks as "sexist, leadist, anti-intellectual, and (using the greek system as) a way to buy friends."

The way to change this opinion, said Syring, is "to say and do what we are about, hold each other in the greek community accountable for the things you choose or do not choose to do, and know why being greek is important."

Syring also stated that greeks give each other friendship, loyalty, and a sense of family.

Syring compared being a member of the greek community to taking an elevator ride. She theorized that an elevator ride can be very quiet and lonely experience. A person can enter the elevator and not speak to anyone, merely watch the numbers as the elevator rides from floor to floor. Another option, however, is to get in the elevator and "get involved in the process" by talking to people, reaching out, and supporting each other" she said.

Syring further remarked that this "process" depends on the individual's ability to get involved in the greek experience, take responsibility, and to get involved.

Syring's presentation was funded by the Alpha Chi Rho Educational Foundation and Stubbs Hall Council.

Longwood Student Grazed By Bullet

By Erin McCay
Editor in Chief

At approximately 2:00 a.m., on Sunday, October4, 1992, a Longwood College student was shot outside of the Subway Shop located across from Frazer and Curry.

According to a campus report, the suspected gunman is a white male, in his late teens, unshaven, approximately 5'10", of medium build, with short, light-brown hair.

According to Donald Winkler, Associate Vice President/Executive Director for Public Affairs/Publications, the victim, whose name has not yet been released, suffered from a gunshot graze on the cheek.

"(The wound) did not require any stitches (as far as I know), but I received my information before (the victim) received any medical attention.

Tammy Stewart, manager of Subway, reported that more than one individual was involved in the incident.

Wells Initiates New Election Procedure

By Erin McCay
Editor in Chief

The Student Government Association of Longwood College (SGA) recently completed the groundwork for the creation of an electronic voting process to be used in all campus-wide elections.

The idea for such a system was founded by Darrell Wells, SGA President.

Wells, who has spent a great deal of time researching activities and facilities utilized by student governmental bodies nationwide, believes that this process wil be the first of its kind in Virginia, and one of the first in the nation.

"We are propelling Longwood College into the twenty-first century," exclaimed Wells.

Working with Dr. James Cross, Wells and other SGA members have set up a preliminary guideline for the usage of such a voting system.

Though subject to changes, the process will probably be fairly simple. As it stands now, the student wishing to cast a ballot in a campus-wide election would call a specific telephone number and be given a number of options as to candidates and offices.

The student must first enter his or her identification number (possibly his or her PIN number or social security number, or both), then make candidate choices. After punching in the desired choices, the student will then be given the opportunity to change any choices he or she has made.

The computer system regulating this process will automatically tally the number of votes per person.

This system will also be utilized throughout the year as an information-gathering tool by the SGA.

By use of these telephone lines, students, staff members, and faculty members will be given the opportunity to make their views known on a variety of subjects of general interest, which will presented in a regular "Question of the Week," says Wells.

Constitutional Studies Fellowship Offered

The James Madison Memorial Fellowship Foundation, a federally endowed program designed to strength instruction about the Constitution in the nation's schools, will award fellowships in 1993 for graduate study of the framing and history of the U.S. Constitution.

Outstanding college seniors and recent college graduates who intend to become secondary school teachers of American History, American Government, and Social Studies are eligible for awards.

Through nationwide competition, James Madison Fellowships will be awarded to at least one legal resident of each state, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and other U.S. territories.

After completing study under a fellowship, James Madison Fellows are required to teach American history, American government, or Social Studies in a secondary school for a minimum of one year for each year of graduate assistance they receive.

Fellowships carry a maximum stipend of $24,000 (up to two years of full-time study for the recent collegians), which can be used only to cover the costs of tuition, fees, books and room and board.

Fellows may enroll in graduate programs leading to master's degrees in American history, Political Science, or Education offered by any accredited university.

Participation in an accredited four-week summer program on the principals, framing, ratification, and implementation of the Constitution and Bill of Rights is required of all fellows during the summer after completion of the first year of study.

Details about the program may be obtained on campus from A. Lyon Williams, Assistant to Dean, Liberal Arts and Sciences, Ruffner 151, 395-2705, or from the James Madison Memorial Fellowship Program, P.O. Box 4030, Iowa City, Iowa 52243-4030.

Scholarships Facilitate Leadership

Student organization officers have been invited to participate in the annual Virginia Beach leadership conference being held on November 6, 7 and 8.

The conference, which cost $65 last year, will only cost student leaders $30 this year, thanks to a special conference scholarship donated by the Longwood Bookstore.

Zav Dadabhoy, the coordinator for these leadership experiences hopes the lowered rates will encourage participation from student leaders who could not afford to attend this conference in the past. According to Dadabhoy, Longwood College suggested this scholarship to Wallace's who readily offered to put up a $300 scholarship grant.

This year's conference theme is "Building a community for social responsibility in the 21st Century." According to Dadabhoy, "the format for this conference is quite different from previous years. The conference Steering Committee has suggested more small group work rather than numerous skill building workshops." Students will be assigned a group to work with for the duration of the weekend. Each group's discussion will be coordinated by one or two Faculty/Staff members and a student leader. Groups will present the leadership models they discussed at the end of the conference.

The SGA has also set aside $1,000 in activity fees to finance groups who develop good and implementable ideas that could work at Longwood

PERSPECTIVES

Perot Lacks Staying Power

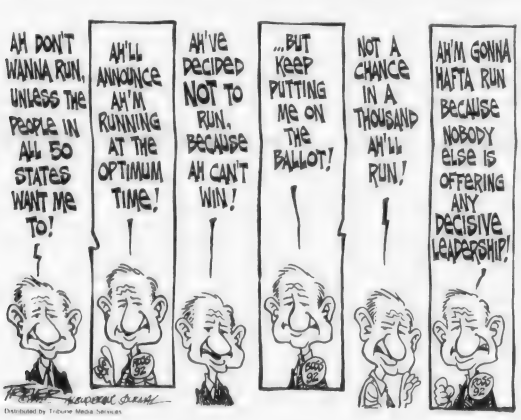
It seems these days that people give up too quickly. They are after immediate status and gratification, and are unwilling to see things through to the end. This attitude seems to have invaded our "government."

Some saw a glimmer of hope in Ross Perot, the Texas billionaire who came out of nowhere with a stuffed wallet and a "national plan." Once he got himself on the ballot and garnered the support of thousands of registered voters, he abruptly defected from the race.

With just a cursory explanation of "lack of support," he left behind millions of enraged supporters, some of whom had quit their jobs to aid his campaign. How could he claim lack of support? He had been placed on the ballot in all 50 states, and the hue and cry over his resignation was tremendous.

Well, like the Terminator, he's back. As the election date draws nearer and the debates begin, Perot suddenly revives his interest in the presidential seat. It seems that inside this middle-aged businessman beats the heart of a selfish child, guided more by whims than brains. If he can't call the shots, he'll just refuse to play.

IF he were elected, how would he respond to differences with Congress and other nations? Ignore them until he is thrown out office or (even more frightening with this self-declared "political outsider"), until we were all annihilated ?



It seems that this candidate is on a power trip, and the race for this nation's most powerful office has become nothing more than a popularity contest. We wouldn't be surprised to see a "The One Who Dies With The Most Toys Wins" bumper sticker on his car. It seems an appropriate representation of the Perot mentality.

At least Perot did seem to show some sense when he endorsed Clinton. Rather than splinter the voting block, he urged his supporters to join with Clinton's to defeat Bush.

But it all comes down to this: Who is Ross Perot? A white knight, free of all the tainted bonds that chain so many politicians, or merely the Donald Trump of politics, one whose sole goal is self-edification?

Whatever his attributes, good and bad, we do know he has one flaw we cannot tolerate in a president - he simply cannot be depended on when the going gets tough. And isn't that the trademark of every effective leader?

Raised In Television-Land

By Hope Jones

Remember the perfume commercial for Enjoli?

I can bring home the bacon...
da da, da dum
Fry it up in a pan...
da da, da dum
And never let you forget you're a ma-an!!
'Cause I 'm a woman

I sincerely believe that this jingle played a major role in socializing me into the woman I am today. I guess that I was about five years old, maybe less, considering the theory that one is socially shaped by the age of three. It was the mid-70's and I loved the Donny and Marie Osmond Show on Friday nights. This commercial produced a slinky, blond, well-coifed woman in a variety of attires representing the many roles in the life she held. I mostly remember an emerald green saran-wrap gown and thinking, "Wow." The lyrics and tone of this commercial have never released me, just as most else on television is so effective on our way of thinking. Even if you're not a couch potato, you are what you watch.

Let's see, what is it that we watch? Being of the general college age, I think I can speak for at least half of the campus at Longwood. I do, of course, exclude those few who watch the Art of Alligator Skinning on PBS.

Number one— MTV. This is exceptional media. We turn it on like a stereo when we're studying, and it's subliminal. Our eyes glaze over when we sit to watch it and we're hypnotized. I know of a room on this campus that keeps it turned on with the sound down and the stereo on— can they be considered addicted?

We love MTV. I love MTV. I refuse to get cable because I know how much I love MTV. I sneak into my suite-mate's room and switch the channel to MTV when she's not paying attention. What is it that's on MTV that is so fascinating? They boast approximately 1000 video's a week, that may sound like a lot, but it averages out to 30 minutes of video's an hour. The bottom line is that it is fashion— in clothes, in music, in taste in general, in information, and of course for this year, in voting. Gov. Bill Clinton made a very smart move to have himself interviewed a couple of months back. He had an audience of most of the 25 million 18-23 year olds. There was no better press than that. We watched, we cared for a minute at least, anyway.

Number two— Soaps. If one walks down any residence hall from 12 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. during the week, the echo of TV's on some sickeningly silly, romantic "I'm having his baby, but I killed his brother" is a good bet. It's a grand sport consisting of lounging, burying your head in disgust, and screaming at the fictitious characters. It makes for good conversation with the other people on the halls. And, by the way, it's not only women who watch them. I know plenty of men who keep up pretty well with Carly and Bo. I think this everlasting trend among students plays an important part in keeping everyone from thinking their lives are miserable and couldn't get any worse. It's very American to believe it's greener on the other side, and this delicious display of tragedy and comedy keeps us coming back day after day for a dose of greedy pleasure.

Number three— I cannot ignore sports. I can say very little about sports, because I know little, but to ignore it would be a travesty. Baseball, football, basketball and whatever else may be on (bowling?) is very well watched. It fits cozily up there with Soaps and MTV.

There is no getting by it, sports. "The thrill of victory, the agony of defeat", is in the blood. You can say you're not a sports fan, but you're not, you just haven't found the right one yet. I remember getting up in the fall and watching ABC's Wide World of Sports until my mom mysteriously kicked me outside to play with a bunch of shmucks who didn't know the spirit of competition that's what it is all about—competing, doing the best one can do and proving it. I, however have learned that my best in sports is not nearly good enough, so I watch it instead.

Number four— Talk shows. From Larry King Live to the Oprah Winfrey Show, we love talk shows. We're nosy folk and we make no bones about it. It's informative, exciting and downright dirty. Late Night provides study breaks, and Arsenio is entertaining enough to forget homework for an hour. TV is inundated with so many that we can find one at any time of day or night, and it's so much like home in a small town. I'm sure someone on this campus knows someone on a talk show.

Number five— The Fox network. This channel actually channels because we get it on two, was made for us (all 25 million of us). It ranges from dysfunctional families and cartoons to teen cops (remember 21 Jump Street?) and special movies that interests us. The move to create this network was brought about by the realization that we count. I think special mention of the game show Studs is important here. Although not Fox also, it deserves it's own category, that of "We know what we want and this is it." Who secretly doesn't want to be on this show? And if you say you don't, I think you doth protest too much.

This is a general list, mind you, but it says a lot. We have MTV and Fox and it's declaration of our independence, Soaps for our need for reassurance that our lives are okay, Sports for the spirit of competition and Talk shows for curiosity and necessary information. What do these have in common? Our simple American character. When we're ready to move on from this phase of educational pursuits not only will we be prepared academically (I hope [illegible]) but we will [illegible] because [illegible] that has passed the [illegible] can turn to [illegible] and we will. [illegible] for the big [illegible]

Swimming Rule Questioned

Editor, Rotunda:

I wish to comment on an aspect of Longwood that has bothered me since I decided to attend this college last year. The swimming test. Yes, that used-to-be-graduation requirement turned General Ed requirement. I must admit that this one eludes my thought process.

I have done some homework on this one and learned that it is a carry-over from the women-only days. I have also heard that it has come before the curriculum committee quite a few times, always is a hot topic of discussion and the argument that the physical education department has for keeping it wins out in the long-run. Now, why it needs to be abolished.

First, swimming has nothing to do with academics. College is supposed to be an educational experience. To counter those that will say that we are here to be well-rounded, I agree, but forcing people to either pass a swimming test, or take a beginning swimming course is not what we are here for. Some of us on earth cannot swim. Does this mean that we should force them to learn to swim or pass a swimming test? I argue no.

To quote from the Longwood College Mission, "The primary educational objective of Longwood College is to provide a baccalaureate and graduated degree curriculum distinguished by academic excellence."

Later, in another statement, "...Longwood is committed to the intellectual, social, personal, and career development of each student." I find no reference to swimming in either of these statements. In fact, the Mission contains no statement about physical development, or total education statement, however, I argue that one could personally develop and be totally educated without ever diving into a pool and treading water for 30 seconds.

For those who argue tradition, I ask, must we keep every tradition that is passed on to us? Certainly a tradition that discriminates against the student body or places an undue burden upon some of the students needs revision or to be abolished.

Yes, this requirement discriminates against those choose not to swim for whatever their reason may be. Ethically, I argue that the college has overstepped its boundaries in this arena. This requirement violates personal autonomy, non-maleficence and justice to students who choose not to swim, or do not feel comfortable in the water. Since Longwood is a State-supported school and not totally private, I wonder what the outcome of a lawsuit on this topic would be?

I have heard another rationale is that the earth is covered 75% by water, and only 25% by land ;and one should feel comfortable in all of the earth's surroundings. I argue that for my aforementioned reasons of why some people do not feel comfortable in the water, this one is not a sound argument either.

Lastly, I have heard another rationale for the learning to swim requirement is that if one is ever in a situation that requires one to know how to swim (e.g. capsized boat) then one possesses the knowledge and physical skill to handle the situation. I am not sure that this one would hold up either.

Most people who I personally know that do like water, avoid it. They do not take boats, go to the beach or the pool. They are happy to exist on the land. I also have a friend who is afraid to fly. Does this mean that Longwood should have a flying requirement in the General Ed portion of the curriculum?

With the current line of thinking of the curriculum committee, it seems a reasonable conclusion.

Longwood reminds us that we are adults. While I understand that colleges and universities all have quirks to them in order to graduate, I feel that a swimming requirement for General Ed goes beyond the boundaries of academia into the forcing of autonomous people to perform something that not everyone may feel comfortable doing. And for those who may be wondering, yes, I took and passed my swimming test.

Why ? Because I vowed to try never to write about anything that I have not at least experienced. But I still wonder how a judge would decide this one if it were brought before a court of law? One day we may find out.

ENTERTAINMENT

MOVIES by Kelly Vanderherchen

Last of the Mohicans Gripping and Entertaining

Last of the Mohicans, starring Danial Day-Lewis and Madline Stowe. Based on the novel by James Fenimore Cooper.

Faced with another long Saturday afternoon, I decided to go see a movie with a friend. Browsing over the entertainment section, The Last of the Mohicans caught my eye.

I knew I had learned, or at least heard about this movie, from somewhere before. "Isn't it based on that book by James Fenimore Cooper," I told myself? "What do I have to lose?" And I gave it a try.

I must admit that I was pleasantly surprised by the quality of this movie. The story line, along with the superb acting and magnificent scenery held my interest the entire time.

I only wish, however that it could have been a little longer.

The story opens during the French and Indian Wars in the 1750's. Here, the audience is introduced to Hawkeye (Daniel Day-Lewis), the adopted son of a Mohican, Chingachgook (Russell Means).

Hawkeye was orphaned when he was a year old and adopted in the Mohican family.

Do not let his adoption fool you into thinking he is the last Mohican. Only the ending will clarify the significance of the title.

Raised as a Mohican, Hawkeye learns Indian methods of hunting and survival, while still holding on to his caucasian heritage. Being fluent in both languages serves to his benefit, because he is able to serve as a scout to the British.

Day-Lewis may not be the average good-looking, calendar pin-up, but there is something very intriguing about him.

It is something in the way he speaks and expresses himself in his role. Day-Lewis truly captured the legendary character of Hawkeye through his strong actions and quick wit.

For the men out there, Madeline Stowe, who plays Day-Lewis's love interest, Cora Munro, was riveting as well.

When the two actors played a scene together, the chemistry between them was electrifying. I couldn't image any other actors playing these roles. It was as if the parts were written solely for Day-Lewis and Stowe.

Getting back to the storyline, Hawkeye rescues Cora and her sister, Alice, along with a British officer, from a tribe of Mohawks.

Hawkeye agrees to escort them to Fort William Henry. Warning: This particular scene involving the Mohawks is very graphic.

The Mohawks slayed over 30 officers, mostly by scalping. Even knowing that special effects professionals can do amazing things to give certain illusions, I still was shocked by the grotesque realism.

Continuing, tattered and worn, the group arrives at the fort only to discover it is under attack by the French. Despite the fact that Hawkeye had agreed previously to take Cora and the rest only as far as the fort, he is nonetheless persuaded to remain with them and help suppress the French.

This is primarily due to Cora's magnetic power over him. Although Hawkeye was raised as an Indian, he allies himself with the British. Not because he particularly likes them, but because of Cora.

A truly climatic scene occurs as Hawkeye and company prepare to go over a waterfall in efforts to escape the Mohawk Indians. The intensity of the scene was fierce due to the velocity of the rushing water and the height of the fall.

I felt, while watching it, that I too was on the canoe along side of them. The audience in the theater that I was in seemed most impressed by the scene, as was I.

I don't want to tell you how the movie ends and spoil the resolution. Allow me to say it spared me from another long and lazy Saturday. I walked out in awe over what I had seen and learned.

The movie, in spite of its power and action, does not have a good guys win-bad guys lose scenario, which is the Hollywood norm. There are no real victors.

Yes, they are tragedies- I just won't tell you who or what. I will say that it is necessary to pay close attention to plot, because only at the end do you learn the significance of the title.

As far as the significance of Cooper's work, I think Daniel Day-Lewis said it best in an interview with Scripps Howard News.

"We all know about The Last of the Mohicans, but none of knew why we knew about it. It's like a catch phrase - I'll be the last of the Mohicans today. You can be the last one tomorrow."

Maybe that's it.

TUNES by Erin McCay

Girlfriend is Sweet

Girlfriend-Matthew Sweet; Zoo Entertainment, 1992

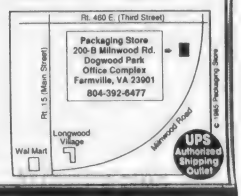
Matthew Sweet has found the ideal vehicle for his pristine voice and visio in his recent release, Girlfriend.

A self-declared "semi-autobiographical" album, Girlfriend seems t cover all aspects of a relationship, from tentative beginnings in "I've Bee Waiting" to reminiscences in the final cut of the album, "Nothing Lasts."

Sweet works with myriad musical styles, and all are successful to degree.

In addition to the most often heard tunes, "I've Been Waiting" an "Girlfriend," the haunting "Nothing Lasts" and catchy "Evangeline" (base on First Comic's "Evangeline") are especially well-done.

The weakest of Sweet's songs is "Day for Night." The tempo of the son is a little too slow, and seems to drag the album down, especially comin after the sprightly "Evangeline."



"Looking At The Sun" is musically similar to some of the Beatles' late works when they were in their psychadelic phase, but Sweet adds a definit modern edge to the tune.

Girlfriend, originally entitled Nothing Lasts, is provocative and engrossing. It is also not to be missed.

Student Wounded In Shooting

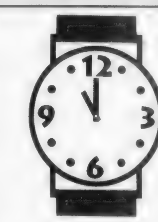
"There were two men fighting," Stewart acknowledged.

According to Stewart, words were exchanged between both suspect and victim. After the gun was fired, some individuals on the scene fled.

Vice President for Student Affairs Phyllis Mable and Dean of Students Tim Pierson were unavailable for comment on this incident.



Some students were concerned about the college's presentation of the shooting. According to the "On Campus" newsletter disseminated by the Public Affairs Office, a student was "threatened at gun point."

However, Student Government Association President Darrell Wells feels that perhaps a stronger statement should have been made by the college.

"Personally," stated Wells, "I think 'threatened' is very different from being grazed by a bullet."

Challange Program Equips Seniors

By Mary Beth Stradley
Staff Writer

On Thursday November 12, at the Radisson Hotel in Lynchburg, VA, the Career Center will participate in the tenth annual Challenge Job Fair.

Challenge is a liberal arts and sciences job fair intended to open career doors for the graduates of Longwood and seven other Virginia colleges.

Attending the job fair will be approximately 50 representatives of national and regional corporations and organizations. Most students attending that day will not be interviewed, although a few may be.

This should not deter students from attending, says one representative of the Career Center. This event may open doors for seniors when vacancies at these companies become available.

Challenge is designed to help seniors gain information about potential employers, to learn of anticipated job openings, to learn how to present one-self effectively to employers, to see what the competition is like, and to practice job search skills.

To participate in Challenge, seniors must first pick up a registration form, instructions, and program information from the Career Center, 2nd floor South Ruffner.

Participants are advised to have prepared a resume and have it ready for distribution by October 5.

It is also suggested that attendees are present at the resume workshop to be held Wednesday, October 7, at 6:00 pm, in the Career Center.

It is necessary to indicate on the registration form to which companies the student would like resumes sent. A list of participating companies is available in the Career Center.

Registration materials must be turned in no later than Thursday, October 9, to the Career Center. Necessary for registration are a completed registration form, a $5 fee (if paying by check, made payable to Longwood College) and one copy per employer of the attendee's resume (as well as one for the Career Center's file).

Participants should also attend one of the following Interviewing Skills Workshops: Wednesday, October 28, 4 pm, Career Center or Monday, November 9, 4 pm, Career Center.

It is also necessary to attend the Challenge finalization meeting Monday, November 9, 5:00 pm, in Lankford Student Union. Participants who are unable to participate must notify the Career Center in advance.

This is a college approved trip, and the Career Center encourages all seniors to attend. Any questions should be directed to the Career Center, 2nd floor, South Ruffner, 395-2063.

CHI

Since its establishment on October 15, 1900, CHI has become a symbol of Longwood's spirit. The knowledge that CHI exists helps to promote and maintain that spirit. Physical evidence of CHI includes banners at special events, signs on the sidewalk, late night walks, CHI-kerchiefs, hidden CHI dolls, and CHI burning.

However, the real evidence of CHI can be seen in the hearts and minds of those who seek its real purpose of constructive support and cooperation in their academic and extra-curricular activities. The spirit of CHI is much more than its personification- it is Longwood .

The aim of CHI is to foster respect for Longwood and loyalty to its academic programs and activities. In fulfilling this aim, CHI hopes to represent the entire student body and commits itself to recognizing the efforts of students, faculty, administration, staff and organizations.

In 1970, CHI underwent many changes. In the past, it served as a disciplinary group. The purpose of these changes was not to disregard the past, but to utilize the valuable aspect of those experiences that have enabled CHI to promote and maintain a spirit of cooperation in every phase of college life. Using the same tune as in years past, the words of the CHI song were changed to express CHI 's increasing role as guardians of the spirit and ideals of Longwood.

The song as it is sung today:

Through the dark of night
The spirit of CHI walks on Bearing blue and white
The spirit of CHI walks on
Throughout the days of Longwood
Strong ties of blue
Although the years may pass by CHI will be there too
Clad in robes of blue
The secret of CHI is kept
Hold the torch of spirit long
Keep it strong
Down the colonnades and
On the campus too, we
Bind the blue and white
The spirit of CHI walks on.

CHI 93 wishes to extend best wishes for a prosperous and rewarding school year. Remember, CHI is not a group of individuals who compose its working staff. It is an abstraction, an ideal, that resides in anyone who does anything to benefit Longwood, its community, or an individual in need. CHI is an idea that is never reached but always strived for. YOU-who reflect the ideals of the blue and white spirit-are CHI, and we thank you.

CHI is watching!!

Price Club Bargain Hunter's Mecca

By Jennie Fennell
Staff Writer

You walk through automatic doors, armed with cash or checkbook, ready to stock up for the season. You have just entered the Price Club, with its neverending rows of bulk-rate items, stacked from ground to sky.

What lures people to the Price Club? During the 1980's, customers were obsessed with convenience. The presence of a multiplicity of 7-11 stores and fast-food restaurants are evidence of this trend. It is now apparent that people are willing to drive miles for bargains. The Price Club is bulk-rate heaven.

The first Price Club was established in 1976 in San Diego, according to MacLean's Magazine (August 5, 1991). Since then, it has continued to expand rapidly.

The club is a members-only organization with a 35 dollars per year membership fee. Those eligible are owners and managers of registered companies, those affiliated with certain organizations, such as credit unions, and public service employees.

Background checks are conducted to ensure that prospective members are shoppers who have no shoplifting arrests or who do not neglect to pay bills.

The interior of the building is plain and enormous. Items range from stereo systems and computers to toilet paper and frozen food.

The most impressive aspect of the store is its incredibly cheap prices. Discounts, in comparison with grocery or retail stores, are as low as 60 percent.

Not only do families flock to the Price Club, but restaurant owners and other professionals stock up for their businesses.

People often find themselves purchasing unneeded items because the low prices are hard to resist.

"I couldn't tell you why I actually bought 24 pounds of staples and a box of 50 whistle pops," commented business-owner Nick Fennell.

Students also compose a large portion of the Price Club's membership.

"My dad made me buy a gargantuan can of iced tea mix, just because it costs the same as a small can in a regular grocery store. Actually, it was a compromise. He wanted me to buy an even bigger one, but I couldn't even carry it," said sophomore Jennie Knopp.

Golf Coach Anticipates Successful Future For Team

By Kim Chapman
Staff Writer

Replacing a coach like Dr. Barbara Smith is never easy, but if Cindy Ho's attitude remains the same as the one in our recent interview, she, too, will soon be regarded as a great coach.

Ho makes her way to Farmville from Beaumont, Texas, where she earned her B.S. and M.S. in Kinesiology at Lamar University and played collegiate women's golf.

Ho takes great care in saying that she is not replacing Dr. Smith, but merely taking over for the coach, who has won numerous coaching awards, including Coach of the Year.

Ho's goal, as the new coach, is "to continue the strong tradition of women's golf at Longwood, but also to give every opportunity to her players to succeed in the classroom, on the playing fields, and in life."

Another aspect Ho feels is important, especially for the foreign players, is that they must realize that Longwood is their home, not only for two semesters per academic year, but hopefully for the four years they pursue their respective educations.

"Once they realize that this is their home, they'll play better and become a better person," Ho says.

This is equally important for not only the players from England, South Africa, Ontario, and Sweden, but also for the women from Pennsylvania and Ohio.

The group of players Ho works with right now are described by her as "hard-working, mentally tough, and willing to take constructive criticism."

She feels that they "can win the Division II Championship, but it's whether they want to cross the line to being great and putting out the effort because it doesn't take much to be average."

With the age difference between coach and player being so small, Ho feels that she can still relate to them.

She is also still at the point where she remembers what it is like to enter one's first collegiate tournament as a freshman, as well as the fear of disappointing the coach.

To this, Ho says, "all I can ask is (that) they give 100% on every shot, in the classroom and in outside world. (T)hey will not disappoint me."

This year's golf team features many familiar faces from last season's successful team.

Leading the Lancers after winning the Tina Barrett Invitational is senior Captain Anna Radford from Kent, England.

Sophomores Brenda Campbell-Harris from Sommerset West, South Africa and Charlaine Coetzee, Durlanville Cape, South Africa, round out the top three.

In addition, Nikki Bone, of Ashland, Ohio; Michelle Zias, of West Reading, Pennsylvania; Jamie Ballow, of Kingston, Ontario; and Anna Holm, of Hestra, Sweden are a vital force for the Lancers.

Coach Ho feels that, "if the ladies I have now are any indication of the players I'll have in the future, I'll do this (coaching) for the rest of my life."

Two Teams Expand League

NHL Promises Surprises

By James Whiteree
Staff Writer

The National Hockey League (NHL) has started off a new season with two brand new expansion teams.

The Ottawa Senators and the Tampa Bay Lightning expand the league to twenty-four teams. The competition is tough, so fans will have to see how the new kids on the block measure up.

According to USA Today, the competition at the top has little room for expansion.

The picks for this year's Stanley Cup are in and the most likely candidate to win is the New York Rangers, from the Patrick Division in the Wales Conference.

The Washington Capitals are pegged to come in second.

The team most likely to oppose the Rangers for the Stanley Cup is the Detroit Red Wings, from the Campbell Conference. The only team which looks up to giving the Red Wings any trouble from this conference is the Vancouver Canucks.

They hope to spoil USA Today's predictions.

What about the Los Angeles Kings? Since Wayne Gretzky, the offense machine of the Kings, has been indefinitely injured in his back and does not know if he will be able to play any more, the Kings have to start over with a new offensive plan. Its previous one revolved around Gretzky.

Therefore, the Kings might miss this year's playoffs while trying to get a new plan into operation.

There is one factor that must be considered: the current Stanley Cup champions, the Pittsburgh Penguins. Having won the last two Championships back to back and having the highest rated offense in the league going into this season, the Penguins will be hard to stop. Can they do it for a third time?

The new additions to the National Hockey League will find it hard to jump right in and expect a good season.

The two new teams will probably find it hard to even defeat the worst teams from last season, but all babies must learn to skate before drinking from the cup.

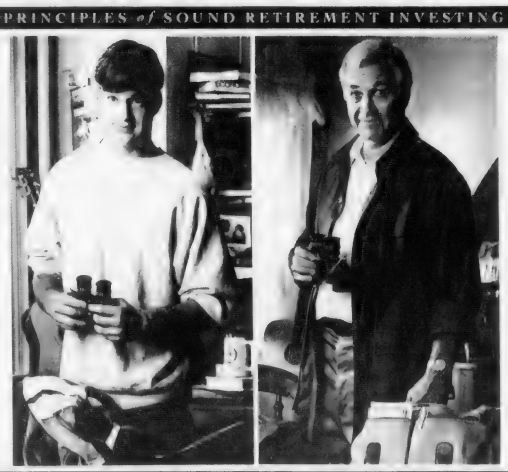
Equestrian Team Gallops To Victory

By Greg Prouty

On Sunday, October 4, 1992, the Longwood Equestrian Team attended its first Intercollegiate Horse Show at UMD.



The team rode against other local colleges such as UMD, UVA, William and Mary, Mary Washington, Sweet Briar, Randolf-Macon Women's College, Goucher, Lynchburg, CNU, and Towson State. Longwood's best performance was by Katy Marzullo, who took first in both Intermediate Horsemanship on the Flat and Novice Horsemanship over Fences.

She then proceeded to the hack off against Tony Pease of UMD where she took reserve high point rider for the show. Another success for Longwood's Team was by Sonja Tucker, a new member, who took third in Beginner Walk-Trot-Canter.

The 1992-93 Equestrian Team consists of nine of its older members, plus eight new members. The team practices at Blue Willow Farm, owned by Elaine Powell.

With these facilities, the team has greatly improved and has high hopes for a successful year. The Longwood Equestrian Team will be competing again on October 25, 1992 at the College of William and Mary.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IF YOU THOUGHT COLLEGE WAS EXPENSIVE, TRY PUTTING YOURSELF THROUGH RETIREMENT.

Think about supporting yourself for twenty-five, thirty years or longer in retirement. It might be the greatest financial test you'll ever face. Fortunately, you have one valuable asset in your favor. Time.

Time to take advantage of tax-deferral. Time for your money to grow.

But starting early is key. Consider this: if you begin saving just $100 a month at age thirty, you can accumulate $192,539* by the time you reach age sixty-five. Wait ten years and you'd need to set aside $227 a month to reach the same goal.

At TIAA-CREF, we not only understand the value of starting early, we can help make it possible—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research are already enrolled in America's largest retirement system. Find out how easy it is to join them. Call today and learn how simple it is to put yourself through retirement when you have time and TIAA-CREF on your side.

Drug Bust Cracks Longwood's Image

By Derick Richard
Ethnic Perspectives Editor

Several students have been arrested by a special task force created to combat the drug problem in the Longwood/Farmville community.

This special team is a combination of various police teams, including our own campus police. Even though the team is small in number, they are managing to apprehend suspects believed to be using and/or selling illegal drugs.

Longwood students are beginning to feel the heat from the drug task force. In an interview with Officer Ellington of the Farmville Police Department, he related several cases of drug use or possession.

On October 24, around the hour of two a.m. police entered the room of Mr. Carrington Coles, a resident of Frazer. They proceeded to look for drugs and found crack cocaine and marijuana with an estimated street value of $1,500.

Coles was charged with possession and intent to distribute. Officer Ellington stated that Coles had been watched for several weeks due to a tip from a confidential source and that a search warrant was obtained.

Police believe that the drugs found were brought in that night from a drug run from the Norfolk area. When asked if there were other students being watched for possible future actions, there was no comment.

When asked if the fact that Coles was blind and that several other individuals had access to his room led them to believe that he was not working alone, there was no comment.

According to Phyllis Mable, Vice President of Student Affairs, Longwood has no official comment on the matter.

Coles was immediately removed from the institution by the college administration and his court hearing is pending. The minimum sentence for such a charge in Virginia is five years. He could serve as much as forty years and pay a fifty thousand dollar fine.

In an interview with Coles he stated that he was treated wrongly by the police and Longwood College. He said, "Because the incident made Longwood look bad, they wanted to make an example of me."

"The drugs were not mine and I told them that, but they refused to listen. They wanted me to pay for something I had no control over. I cannot see, I am totally blind, but yet they hold me responsible for drugs left in my room when I was not there. It is ridiculous, no it is a shame."

"It's a shame that Longwood would rather protect its wonderful image than the rights of one of its students. I am gone now, Longwood has dismissed me for they feel I am a danger to myself, someone else and Longwood College."

"There have been cases of drugs found on our campus before, more than anyone cares to mention, but no one has been removed from the institution. Instead it is pushed under the Longwood rug and is never seen again."

Just days prior to the arrest of Coles the task force apprehended yet another student in Tabb. Mr. Peter Gillis was found with a small amount of marijuana. He faces up to a year in jail and a thousand dollar fine.

According to Gillis, he will be permitted to complete this semester's coursework, but as of the beginning of the Spring 1993 semester he is suspended as a result of a Judicial Board hearing of his case.

In a conversation with a judicial board member, it was stated that this semester's case load has been filled with charges of drug use or possession.

Drug use infiltrates many spheres of campus life

Fraternity ousted for racial slur

ATHENS, Ga. (CPS) — A racial slur in a pledge pamphlet has resulted in a fraternity being suspended from the University of Georgia campus for an indefinite period.

University officials discovered that a printed pamphlet for Pi Kappa Phi fraternity contained the phrase "no niggers." An investigation revealed that some fraternity members knew about the slur and chose to do nothing about it.

More than 1,000 students signed a petition demanding that the fraternity be ousted from campus. The petition was started by the university's chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The suspension resulted from an Oct. 22 hearing in which the fraternity exercised its option to have the case heard by an administrative officer rather than a student panel.

The fraternity can apply for reinstatement during the summer of 1993.

"I intend the time during this suspension to be spent learning and teaching the value of diversity in a modern university and to satisfy the expectations announced by your national organization and your local alumni," wrote William Bracewell, director of judicial programs who served as hearing officer on the case.

Pi Kappa Phi president James "Tripp" Ackerman III appeared at a recent meeting with the Black Greek Council and read a statement of apology by the pamphlet's author, and said the fraternity did not condone the material.

"The offensive statement was not condoned by the chapter president or the brotherhood," Ackerman said. "I regret that this situation may have caused others to form negative opinions about the Lambda chapter, the Greek community or the University of Georgia community as a whole."

ROTC conducts training exercises

In the last two weeks, Longwood College Reserve Officers Training Corps (R.O.T.C.) has conducted three training exercises, both on and off campus.

The R.O.T.C. program prepares students for commissioning in the United States Army, as well as familiarizing students who have no wish to pursue a military career with the role the army plays in protecting our nation.

During the weekend of November 6, cadets at Fort A.P. Hill located near Fredericksburg, VA, learned about garrison life, rappelling, the M-16 rifle, and the M-60 machine gun. Cadets also completed an assault course and had the opportunity to experience flying in a helicopter.

"Riding in the Blackhawk was worth the trip," commented Steve McKeown.

Monday found students from many R.O.T.C. classes rappelling from a National Guard helicopter onto Iler Field. A good-sized crowd gathered to watch as fellow students jump from heights equal to the size of Curry and Frazer.

Well-trained by the R.O.T.C. instructors, all cadets safely and successfully reached the Earth.

This Saturday, a group of 21 students took a morning trip to Fort Pickett, Virginia.

"It was the hardest thing I ever did in my life, but it was very fulfilling," said sophomore Glenn Baron. "Teamwork was very important. It was difficult, but I felt incredible when finished.

Signing up for a military science course, says one member of the R.O.T.C. program, does not entail an obligation to join the army. However, it does give one an opportunity to challenge oneself, learn exciting skills, and enjoy participating in events like rappelling.

PERSPECTIVES

Liberty and Justice For Whom?

No one said this school was perfect, except perhaps an administrator or two. But injustices go on here every day. Most are small, unnoticed and seemingly hurts no one, but then there are others.

Some people will always find something to complain about - - indeed most of us have to admit to that fault. But some issues cannot be ignored, and discussion is vital to correcting all problems.

Some people (mostly Longwood officials) feel that the paper deals too much in the negative and not enough in the positive. We disagree. The Rotunda has gone from the "rah-rah" paper of the past, merely a glorified newsletter for the publicity department of the College, to a paper responsible for reporting the news, no matter what forms it takes.

We are often approached by students wishing to have an issue voiced in the paper. To them, their concerns are very important and we agree. Here are some of a few brought forth:

What is verbal abuse? It depends on who you are here at Longwood. Would a black student being called a "Nigger" constitute verbal abuse? We say Yes, but our fine school says no.

There have been several racial incidences on campus in which the victim had no chance to redress the situation. In some cases Longwood disavowed its own policy and refused to allow a student the right to file charges.

Does a female being called a "Slut" qualify as verbal abuse? "Yes!" quoth Longwood, and for that we are thankful - no one deserves the pain and stigma that comes along with any such title.

Now here is an issue Longwood wishes to have hushed up: Drugs, Drugs and more Drugs. Yes, here on our campus. Surprise!

Recently, Longwood has been rocked with various forms of harmful substances.

It came in all forms, both legal and illegal. From crack cocaine to marijuana and Jempson seeds, all of which have had a negative effect on the lives of our fellow students.

Longwood has a policy that enables the school to immediately dismiss a student if it feels that he or she is a danger to him/herself, the community or the institution. Longwood has used this policy this semester for a drug offense. This is a fair policy if it applies to all students, but it does not.

Longwood trains its Judicial and Honor Board members to be consistent and view each offense as the same (i.e. stealing a ten dollar calculator is the same as stealing a hundred dollar radio).

After all, a theft is a theft. Just as an illegal substance is an illegal substance. Monitory value or the belief that "a little marijuana is O.K." does not go along with what administrators are saying to our parents and the onlooking public. But some students get special treatment from administration, be it negative or positive. For example, last semester a highly placed campus leader was potentially going to be charged with a judicial board violation.

The Rotunda is not in any way attempting to condemn this individual for the act he was initially accused of. We are concerned only with the manner in which this situation was handled by the college.

Before charges were brought about, one of the college Vice Presidents made a personal visit to the injured party, requesting that they allow time for an investigation by that administrator before formally filing charges. How many of us would get such great service from the college?

Why can't Longwood practice what it preaches? We as students must abide by their policies, so why shouldn't they?

Hot dogs held responsible for societies ills

By Hope A. Jones
Rotunda Staff

When I was but a young'n, I exhibited certain behavioral characteristics which have blossomed as I have. I was told two things, constantly,—

1. I had an "active imagination," and
2. I couldn't lie still during nap time (I was nicknamed "wiggle worm").

These, hm, virtues (as I like to call them) have followed me up the ladder towards adulthood. Actually, they still have a great deal of influence on most of my day to day activities.

My "active imagination" has led me to form opinions and theories.

My most recent theory (still under construction) is the Youth-Parental Unit Expiration by Hot Dog Syndrome (YPUEHDS).

I am under the assumption that hot dogs have become dangerous victuals for the youth of today.

I am not focusing on the group of 18-23 year olds, but on those just below us: the 10-17 year olds.

Hot dogs are the essential easy meal for this age group and are nearly the worst packaged food one can eat. The Food and Drug Administration claims hot dogs are so vile, only one per year can be acceptable to the body.

But wait! Aren't hot dogs fed indiscriminately to teething babies, and popped into microwaves across America in time for the "After School Special"? "Death Dogs" at Par-Bill's are extremely popular and precious around midnight on the weekends. The youth of America are swarmed with hot dogs!

What is this doing to the human body? What can all that Spam-like meat ends be doing to our youth's system?

Here's where my theory comes in. I believe that whatever this foul substance is in hot dogs is making this same group of 10-17 year olds responsible for establishing a trend of killing their parents.

Yes, this disgusting lack of values and current trend of parental killings can be blamed on hot dogs.

It makes perfect sense. How many of those parents off-handedly remarked to their kid "Nuke a 'dog for dinner—Mom and I will be late."?

And how many of these kids were weaned off the bottle only to have a hot dog to replace it when teething?

The absence of parental guidance in this society has given this budding generation no virtues to experience.

Where's Dad? One might argue that he's never been a domestic, but isn't it about time? Where's Mom? Trying to supplement Dad's paycheck.

This backlash to the double income family is harsh. Parents are dying in a sick pattern, and an easy scapegoat is the hot dog. So my theory of YPUEHDS goes on, unchallenged.

My wiggle-worm problem, however, kept me up tonight, formulating this theory for the public concern. I guess I'll never grow up.

The Low State of Higher Education

By Robert J. Samuelson

You should treat lightly the loud cries now coming from colleges and universities that the last bastion of excellence in American education is being gutted by state budget cuts and mounting costs. Whatever else it is, higher education is not a bastion of excellence. It is shot through with waste, lax academic standards and mediocre teaching and scholarship.

True, the economic pressures — from the Ivy League to state systems — are intense. Last year nearly two thirds of schools had to make mid-year spending cuts to stay within their budgets. It is also true (as university presidents and deans argue) that relieving those pressures merely by raising tuitions and cutting courses will make matters worse. Students will pay more and get less. The university presidents and deans want to be spared further government budget cuts. Their case is weak.

Higher education is a bloated enterprise. Too many professors do too little teaching to too many ill-prepared students. Costs can be cut and quality improved without reducing the number of graduates. Many colleges and universities should shrink. Some should go out of business. Consider:

Except for elite schools, academic standards are low. About 70 percent of freshmen at four-year colleges and universities attend their first choice schools. Roughly 20 percent go to their second choices. Most schools have eagerly boosted enrollments to maximize revenues (tuition and state subsidies).

Dropout rates are high. One-half or more freshmen don't get degrees. A recent study of Ph.D. programs at 10 major universities (including Harvard, Stanford and Yale) also found high drop-out rates for doctoral candidates.

The attrition among undergraduates is particularly surprising because college standards have apparently fallen. One study of seven top schools (including Amherst, Duke and the University of Michigan) found widespread grade inflation. In 1963, half of the students in introductory philosophy courses got a B- or worse. By 1986, only 21 percent did. If elite schools have relaxed standards, the practice is almost surely widespread.

Faculty teaching loads have fallen steadily since the 1960s. In major universities, senior faculty members often do less than two hours of teaching per day. Professors are "socialized to publish, teach graduate students and spend as little time teaching [undergraduates] as possible," concludes James Fairweather of Penn State University in a new study. Faculty pay consistently rises as undergraduate teaching loads drop.

Universities have encouraged an almost mindless explosion of graduate degrees. Since 1960, the number of masters' degrees awarded annually has risen more than fourfold to 337,000. Between 1965 and 1989, the annual number of MBAs (masters in business administration) jumped from 7,600 to 73,100.

Our system has strengths. It boasts many top-notch schools and allows almost anyone to go to college. But mediocrity is pervasive. We push as many freshmen as possible through the door, regardless of their qualifications. Because bachelors' degrees are so common, we create more graduate degrees of dubious worth. Does anyone believe the MBA explosion has improved management?

You won't hear much about this from college deans or university presidents. They created this mess and are its biggest beneficiaries. Large enrollments support large faculties. More graduate students liberate tenured faculty from undergraduate teaching to concentrate on writing and research: the source of status. Richard Huber, a former college dean, writes knowingly in a new book ("How professors play the Cat Guarding the Cream: Why We're Paying More and Getting Less in Higher Education"):

"Presidents, deans and trustees ... call for more recognition of good teaching with prizes and salary incentives. The reality is closer to the experience of Harvard University's distinguished paleontologist Stephen Jay Gould: 'To be perfectly honest, though lip service is given to teaching, I have never seriously heard teaching considered in any meeting for promotion.... Writing is the currency of prestige and promotion.'"

About four-fifths of all students attend state-subsidized systems, from community colleges to prestigious universities. How governors and state legislatures deal with their budget pressures will be decisive. Private schools will, for better or worse, be influenced by state actions. The states need to do three things.

First create genuine entrance requirements. Today's low standards tell high school students: You don't have to work hard to go to college. States should change the message by raising tuition sharply and coupling the increase with generous scholarships based on merit and income. To get scholarships, students would have to pass meaningful entrance exams. Ideally, the scholarships should be available for use at in-state private schools. All schools would then compete for students on the basis of academic quality and costs. Today's system of general tuition subsidies provides aid to well-to-do families that don't need it or unqualified students who don't deserve it.

Next, states should raise faculty teaching loads, mainly at four-year schools. (Teaching loads at community colleges are already high.) This would cut costs and re-emphasize the primacy of teaching at most schools. What we need are teachers who know their fields and can communicate enthusiasm to students. Not all professors can be path-breaking scholars. The excessive emphasis on scholarship generates many unread books and mediocre articles in academic journals. "You can't do more of one [research] without less of the other [teaching]," says Fairweather. "People are working hard — it's just where they're working."

Finally, states should reduce or eliminate the least useful graduate programs. Journalism (now dubbed "communications"), business and education are prime candidates. A lot of what they teach can — and should — be learned on the job. If colleges and universities did a better job of teaching undergraduates, there would be less need for graduate degrees.

Our colleges and universities need to provide a better education to deserving students. This may mean smaller enrollments, but given today's attrition rates, the number of graduates need not drop. Higher education could become a bastion of excellence if we only try.

Library's effectiveness questioned

Editor, Rotunda:

What is the purpose of the new library? Certainly the purpose is not to assist students in gathering necessary information needed to complete assignments- at least not from my experiences.

What is the purpose of the library staff? These are question I have yet to find and answer to. Maybe the lack of staff confuses the purpose of the staff.

Where are the new books and access to more resources for research purposes? I mean, when I think of a new library, I picture shelves full of valuable books and a variety of journals pertaining to the curriculum here at Longwood. I am not asking for a library to have everything, but the old library, Lancaster, offered access to more information. Students did not have to wait for someone to go in the basement to bring up books.

It is very frustrating to try to research topics in the library using the computers and the book you want to check out read: status:: has not been checked in since 1987. When the librarians are confronted about things like this, they have no answer. Why not reorder these books that have not been returned for over five years? Evidently the books are not coming back!

Another thing, I do not appreciate the new computers in the library- don't get me wrong _ like Infotrac, Social Science, and Psyclit . But they are useless without the Journals. What good are the new computers when the journals are not available in the library? More than a few journals are listed as : "Library does not subscribe to this journal."

I think the concern of the people responsible for designing and furnishing the library were more concerned with modernizing the campus rather than providing the students with better access to the resources we need as college students.

My frustration is not directed towards the staff of the library, but to the administration, who have carelessly chosen to spend my tuition and the tuition of many other students.

How much of my tuition was put toward this new library? Well, I am not satisfied!

CSA president clarifies views

Editor, Rotunda:

Understanding that a collegiate newspaper is the training ground for budding journalists, I am writing to clarify the story in your October 5th issue ("Conflict Ensues After Directory Completed"). According to the article, the controversy is that no money is taken from commuter activity fees to include commuter students in the Student Directory. In fact, the true problem is that services and the needs of the diverse commuter student population are being addressed by the Longwood College administration on an uneven 'playing field', as compared to residential students. The cause of this imbalance is the attitude of the administration, which still views Longwood solely as a residential college, even though 30% of the student population is composed of commuters. Why should commuters have to claw and scratch to be included in the "Student" Directory, when the SGA doesn't have to badger the administration to get residential students included??

Although the meningitis event happened last spring, it was another manifestation of the disregard with which commuters are faced by the "Ruffnerites." In that instance, commuters, along with faculty and staff, were treated with contempt when we were told we did not need the vaccination because we were not in "day to day" contact with those infected. Right!?!

All we are asking is to be thought of as students equal to those who reside on campus. Inclusion in the directory would go a long way towards that goal. We don't mind paying our fair share. However, in a memo from Rose Hurley (dated 9/14/92), the cost per residential student was $0.60. For commuters, the cost was $1.25 per student. If that's fair, something is wrong.

The last line of the article summed up what is wrong. "The problem for this year is solved. It should be solved permanently. That is what the Commuter Student Association is trying to accomplish.

Thank you and keep up the good work.

Sincerely,
A.C. Russell
Chairman

Greek students have rights, too

Editor, Rotunda:

I just wanted to comment on the message written on the side of South Cunningham: "GO GREEK...PRACTICE DISCRIMINATION."

This message itself is discriminatory. Therefore the person or persons responsible for the message practices discrimination as well. That is if you believe the greek community is indeed discriminatory.

I am a greek and this is very unfair! I do not know if this person or persons had one bad run-in with a greek and is stereotyping the rest of us or is just plain jealous of greeks period.

You chose not to be a part of the greek society just as we chose to be a greek. Everyone is entitled to freedom of choice. However, it is unfair to be punished for doing so.

There is so much negative emphasis put on the greek community. What about all the positive aspects of being greek? Campus clean-up, philanthropy support, campus spirit, and leaders.

The greek society just can't win for losen' '

Honesty is really the best policy

Editor, Rotunda:

Does this situation seem familiar to you? What are you doing tonight? Drinking of course, and so are you. But I am underage. So what! Who cares? If anyone asks, say you are twenty-one.

But here is where that person is wrong. The Longwood College Honor Board cares a lot and we take a serious stand to abide by our Honor Code.

It is bad enough to break a conduct standard (also known as the policies) of the Honor Code; but do not compound the problem with a lie.

With the exception of one case held over from the previous semester, every case for the first five weeks of school (Honor Board meets weekly) has dealt with one issue.

The issue is that of lying and underage drinking. All cases are different and treated individually, but never has the board has so many cases so similar in nature as this. In fact it is somewhat alarming.

The purpose of this article is to inform the general public. Again, each case is different and no one sanction is etched in stone. But!!

An individual found responsible of such charges may receive community service hours, educational programs, loss of privileges, hall projects, probation, suspension, dismissal or any combination of the above.

Let me leave you, the reader, with these words. If you can do the crime, be man/woman enough to do the time.

Face it head on and tell the truth. "Yes, I was drinking underage or yes, I broke the window (accidently of course); and even yes to having an unregistered guest if asked.

Remember honesty is the Best Policy.

Fire department demands retraction

Editor, Rotunda:

On behalf of the Farmvile Volunteer Fire Department, I formally request that the Rotunda prominently publish a retraction or correction to the article entitled "ARC Flooded During Fire." This article, written by you, contains several inaccuracies.

Your article reports response times which contradict each other. A fire department official reports 10 minutes. "One ARC resident" reports a response time of 35 minutes. "A number of eyewitnesses" report 30 minutes. An unidentified source reports a response time of 40 minutes. How much time did it take for the first Farmville Volunteer Fire Department truck to arrive on the scene?

According to the Farmville Police Department Dispatch's records, Longwood College notified Farmville's dispatch office at 3:19:58 p.m. The department arrived at the scene at 3:33 p.m. By official records, the fire department arrived on scene at the Longwood ARC structure fire (October 10) in seconds over three minutes.

Your article, through its use of inaccurate and contradictory facts creates a false impression of Farmville's volunteer firefighting department. By publishing such an unprofessional piece, you also jeopardize your paper's credibility.

I feel you could begin to restore that credibility by granting our request.

Respectfully,

John Applin

Great American Smokeout is coming

Editor, Rotunda:

I am writing in support of the annual Great American Smokeout (G.A.S.) scheduled Thursday, November 19, 1992. This is the day the American Cancer Society sets aside to encourage smokers to take twenty-four hours off from smoking. During this day, many smokers decide to try to quit. I was surprised to learn as a cancer volunteer, that a person completes clinical withdrawel from tobacco in seventy-two hours (3 days). The psychological withdrawal is more difficult and lengthy and after requires additional support and behavior modification.

As a nurse practitioner in the Student Health Services, I see the effects of cigarette smoking every day. Many students come to see me and say they have been smoking since ages 12-14 and would like to quit. Fifty to seventy-five percent of the students with upper respitory problems have smoking as a contributing factor. The students understand that smoking contributes to the ear infections, bronchitis, and sinusitis infections that they suffer with. Most of the students want to quit, but acknowledge the power of the addiction and want encouragement and support to quit instead of lectures and scorn from friends and/or health providers. I applaud any student who quits for the smokeout day or who adopts a friend for the day who needs help.

If we can be of any assistance to a student who wants help with how to quit, please contact a nurse or health provider. Wellness education is a large part of the health service philosophy. I would close with a quote I use for myself regarding a lot of health and lifestyle related issues. "Give yourself permission to take an intermission." Good luck November 19.

Yours toward better health,

Pam Higgins

Where Can We Go?

By Derick Richard
Ethnic Perspectives Editor

Black organizations are facing a serious problem. As a matter of fact, all organizations, especially minority groups (groups low in number: regardless of race) wishing to hold a function open to the general public are being affected.

This does not concern the larger of the fraternities or sororities that have chapter rooms, but it does affect a few. Those smaller ones wish to make it known to the campus and the Farmville community that everyone eighteen and older is welcome at any of their functions.

As we all know, some groups on campus, for one reason or another, do not receive much support from college students. And in order for some organizations to survive here, they must open their doors to everyone.

But Longwood's administration is making it almost impossible for "us" and I do say us, for it is hindering the forward movement of a number of smaller organizations, in one of which I am involved.

A recognized organization on campus has the right to have a function on campus and invite whomever it wishes. The college does it on a daily basis, and in some instances even forces participation from its students and faculty.

Longwood does not even follow its own policies and procedures unless it is in its own best interest. I shall speak only of what I know first hand with my fraternity's dealing with the college.

It is like pulling teeth to try to prepare a non-alcoholic event on this campus. This is what Longwood wants to see more of, or so I thought.

A non-alcoholic event does not require a guest list, according to the alcohol policy. Only parties do, and non-alcoholic events are not classified as parties. But the administration would like to know who is going to attend from the community, as if that were possible.

Once we are past the problem of a guest list, there is finding a room to have the event. Even though no policy is in place to hinder reserving any room, an unwritten law is present.

Namely, The Commons and Fourth Floor South Cunningham (places traditionally used for such functions are now off limits unless approved by the Dean of Students). This was never the case since I came here in 1989.

"Where Can We Go?" is the question I need to have answered. It was suggested that we use Lankford's A, B and C rooms.

But that would never do. Besides the fact that it closes at twelve, imagine all the organization trying to use it now; plus the groups who pay to come in. They have more rights than we do.

My fraternity finally received what some people may call a chapter room this past spring, but we are not allowed to hold functions there with more than eight people because it would be a fire hazard.

How can we (all groups) do anything on this campus if we are stopped at every turn? Give us places to hold events, follow your own policies and trust that we have the good sense to manage our affairs. Allow us the same rights and privileges granted those of larger groups and maybe we can grow as well.

Matthew Sweet and Superdeformed shake Lancer Hall

By Michael K. Carter
Rotunda Staff Writer

On Thursday, October 29th Longwood College and Lancer Productions welcomed Matthew Sweet and Superdeformed to Lancer Hall.

The show, scheduled for 8 p.m., got underway at around 8:30 p.m. with the opening band. Freddie Jhonston and his four man New York/New Jersey based band, Superdeformed, opened the show with a set of ten songs, some of which were taken off of Jhonston's resently released solo album "Can You Fly."

After finishing up the set, Jhonston left the student crowd with the words of wisdom, "rock and roll all night, and party everyday".

Matthew Sweet took the stage some twenty minutes later, after the "roadies" had switched the band's equipment.

Sweet sweated through a twelve song set that concluded with his latest hit, "Girlfriend." Sweet then left the stage with his band, saying "that's it ya'll."

During the five or so minutes Sweet was back stage before the encore, some ten to twenty students, obviously not concert goers, left the building. Sweet then returned to the stage for an additional two songs that had most of the remaining crowd slam dancing.

The whole show went well. Tau Kappa Epsilon ran the concession stand, and Alpha Chi Rho provided such strong security for the bands that one guard, named Ralph, said that he was willing to "kill" anyone who rushed the stage. Jhonston dedicated a song to Ralph for his fervor.

Although Jhonston and Sweet are not the biggest rock stars, they put on a good show that showed both professionalism and class, which is seldom seen in today's rock concert scene.

Gregory's 'Jerry's Girls' soars

By Teresita Edwards
Staff Writer

It was bright and colorful and moving, not giving you the chance to catch your breath. No, not a car, or bird... not even a butterfly! It's Jerry's Girls a play starring Kay Starr.

The play was presented by Don Gregory, in association with Saul Kaufman and the Longwood College Series of Performing Arts.

The musical opened up with four members of the ensemble dressed in colorful outfits singing "It Takes a Woman."

The musical encompassed a variety of different emotions, all from a woman's point of view. The production gave words and lyrics to so many of the emotions that women feel.

Two of the most touching pieces were performed by Kay Starr ("I won't Send Roses") and Dee Dee Gray ("It Only takes a Moment").

The entire show moved: the transitions were fast and did not break the flow of the production.

The tap dancing scene was an added surprise, and it was great! The actresses seemed to have fun, fun which infected the audience.

The costumes were especially noticeable, bright and eye-catching.

The only thing I wondered was how were they able to change costumes so quickly and still look as if they had spent hours dressing.

The vocals as well as the lyrics were wonderful. This was a show that should not have been missed. I give it four stars.

Panhellenic Council and IFC kick-off anti-alcohol project G.A.M.M.A.

The Panhellenic Council and Interfraternity Council here at Longwood announce the kick off of Project G.A.M.M.A. (Greeks Advocating Mature Management of Alcohol).

The program, spearheaded by BACCHUS (Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students), gives the members of fraternities and sororities the opportunity to create, implement, and participate in more campus alcohol education programs.

Through Project G.A.M.M.A., the greek undergraduates are re-examining the role alcohol has played in their chapters' activities, and are coming up with new and viable strategies for promoting fun, healthy, and safe activities.

Project G.A.M.M.A. is part of a national greek movement to educate members on responsible decision-making regarding alcohol education and abuse prevention.

The uniform increase of the U.S. drinking age to 21, and the decision by many national fraternities and sororities that chapters will no longer purchase alcoholic beverages with chapter funds means that education about alcohol, understanding liability, and alternatives to social events centered around alcohol are even more important.

At Longwood, Project G.A.M.M.A. began their campaign with an Alternative Mixer contest during Alcohol and other Drug Awareness Week, October 22-29. G.A.M.M.A. is also looking into the development of a Greek Peer Education Program known as "Our Chapter, Our Choice."

Kappa Delta hosts 50's dance contest

On Wednesday, October 14, 1992 from 8:00 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. Kappa Delta Sorority hosted a non-alcoholic 50's dance in the Student Union at the Lancer Cafe.

The shag contest was won by Chuck Gallagher and Susan Poore, and Ken DeWitt took the prize in the "smoothest move" competition.

Students also had the opportunity to show off their personal renditions of the swim and the jerk.

The costumes were outrageous. Those poodle skirts, rolled jeans, varsity sweaters, pigtails, piles of make-up, and saddle shoes made the Nineties seem to be still forty years in the future.

According to one member of Kappa Delta, this non-alcoholic function was held to encourage fun without alcoholic beverages.

And many of the attendees feel that the fun-filled event proved that one can have a fantastic time without having to have a "buzz."

The event was also a fund-raiser for the Kappa Delta. It was sponsored by the Student Union through the Lancer Cafe.

There were many Kappa Delta sisters there. Even Vice President for Student Affairs Phyllis Mable dropped in to see how the event was coming along, as well as some non-greek students.

GRE test offered for first time on computer

By John Williams

(CPS) — At first glance, less stress and taking the Graduate Record Examination appear to be mutually exclusive. Just because your academic future is on the line doesn't mean you have to be nervous about it, does it?

Not so anymore, say Educational Testing Service (ETS) officials and college administrators, due to the advent of the GRE general test that can be taken by computer.

"I really liked it. It wasn't as ponderous as taking the paper-and-pencil version. I felt like I was going at my own pace," said Rosalinda Lidh, a history major at Troy State University in Alabama.

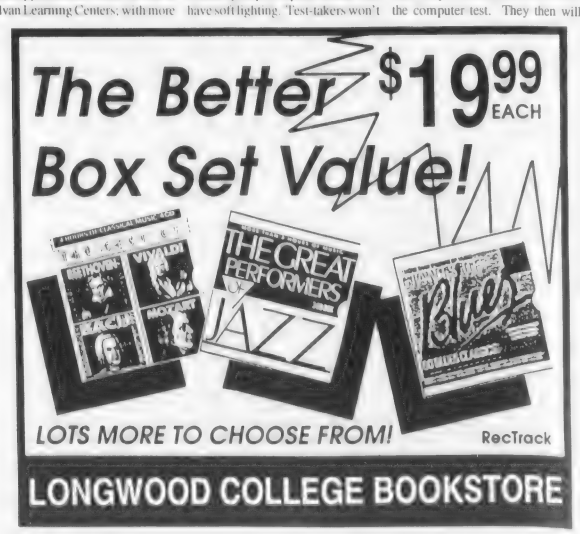
As of Oct. 12, students can schedule an appointment to take the test at Sylvan Learning Centers, with more than 100 test centers nationwide. The service is also being provided at some universities.

One big advantage to taking the test on computer is that it will reduce the time involved in the testing process. The examinees also can get their scores immediately at the end of the test, instead of waiting weeks for the mailed report, and schools will get transcripts quicker.

"The computerized test is more oriented toward the individual, not the group," said Derek Walker, an electrical engineering major at Massachusetts Institute of Technology who participated in an early field test. "Even the environment was better, more comfortable."

The test can be administered in smaller groups in quiet offices that have soft lighting. Test-takers won't be in a room with hundreds of other people.

"For some people, taking the test on computer will release some tension," said Linda Trevarthen, coordinator of testing at Michigan State University. "Taking it in an individualized setting will be better, and at MSU we can give efficient and quiet testing conditions."



The computerized version of the GRE costs $90, double the cost of the paper-and-pencil test, but Charlotte Kuh, executive director of the GRE, said ETS is trying to lower the price. For people who otherwise can't afford to take the test, fee waivers will be provided for the computer test, just as they are for the paper test, she said.

After students contact ETS to register, they will receive a voucher for the computer test. They then will make an appointment at the Sylvan Center or the university center to take the test. They will receive 30 minutes instruction on how to use the computer, and then take the test. At the end, the score will be available for those who want it; if they choose to see it, the score is automatically recorded.

"Students not familiar with computers didn't have any problems with this test," Kuh said. "This is not software with bells and whistles."

Freshman class officers take office

Mable, Poole comment at seminar closing

By Kelly Vanderherchen
Staff Writer

On November 4, 1992, the students and staff ended the Fall '92 Longwood Seminar course with a closing session.

Students taking the class, orientation and seminar leaders, guests speakers and guests attended the program in Lancer Gym.

Phyllis Mable, Vice President for Student Affairs, welcomed the audience and congratulated the freshmen on completing the course and their first few weeks of college. In her welcome, Ms. Mable stressed involvement at Longwood. She encouraged students to "branch out and engage in some of the activities."

She ended with a quote to the new students from John Richards Jr. "When it comes to the future, there are three types of people. There are the ones who let it happen, (the ones that) make it happen, and (the ones that) want it to happen."

Glen Baron, Sophomore class president, remarked on involvement as well. She told students to become involved in the academics as well as other activities.

She said the best gifts the college could possibly give would be an enrichment in life and a vision of better world. She said while names, facts, and dates are important, one most think about the world too.

Ms. Baron finished her remarks by passing the gavel to Kristen Englehart, freshman class president.

Ms. Englehart proceeded to welcome the class of 1996. She spoke of the freshmen class council, consisting of one representative and alternate from each freshmen residence hall and one representative and alternate from the freshmen commuter students.

After the initial recognition of these students, Ms. Englehart encouraged the freshmen to show their involvement through their questions and comments.

Dr. Darryl Poole, Vice President for Academic Affairs, was the invited speaker. He opened his speech jokingly by stating, "I'm a freshman at Longwood too. I came here in July."

After congratulating the students, he told them that they will have the next fours years to speculate about their future. He stressed the importance of the environment and the need to become aware of it.

He gave an altered version of the speech he delivered at Convocation on September 10 entitled, "Beer Cans and Intellectual Epiphany."

Poole stressed to the freshmen class the necessity for realizing about the way they think. He pointed out that this would come with the years that college training will provide.

Dr. Poole said that the students will have an "epiphany," or an insight, of their future goals and expectations.

He emphasized this point with a quote from Oliver Wendell Holmes. "A moment's insight is worth a life's experience."

Dr. Poole also mentioned the generation gap between his generation versus the freshmen's generation. He remarked that the freshmen's generation sees the environmental issues and concerns differently than his generation.

"Yours is more visual than mine. You need a fresh way of seeing the world (and) the first year of college is as good as any time to start."

After closing his speech, Dr. Poole introduced the undergraduate Deans of Schools; Berkwood M. farmer, Dean of the School of Business and Economics; William L. Frank, Dean of the School of Liberal Arts and Sciences; and William E Schall, Dean of the School of Education and Human Services.

April Rose, freshmen class secretary, introduced the Freshman Hall of Fame. These are students whose names were submitted by seminar leaders because of their involvement in activities at Longwood.

Some, but not all, of the activities include Lancer Productions, Show Choir, and the various sports offered at Longwood.

In closing the ceremony, Mary Kay Cochran, Student Development, recognized publicly the seminar and orientation leaders involved in the Longwood Seminar Course.

Each seminar leader was awarded with a certificate of recognition from the students in their individual groups.

Suit puts heat on Chili Peppers

FAIRFAX, Va. (CPS) — A former George Mason University student has filed a $4 million lawsuit against the Red Hot Chili Peppers for damages suffered as a result of a 1989 sexual assault.

The student was seeking damages for mental trauma and humiliation from four members of the band, the Red Hot Chili Peppers band partnership, the band's manager and agent, the Broadside reported. Trial on the civil suit was expected to begin Feb. 9, 1993.

According to the student newspaper, the woman was working for the university's Program Board at the time of the incident.

After an April 21, 1989 concert, the woman said she was assisting band members outside their dressing room when lead singer Anthony Kiedis asked whether she would have sex with him and thrust his penis into her face.

Kiedis was convicted of sexual assault and indecent exposure in 1990 in Fairfax County, Va. He was fined and sentenced to one day in jail. Kiedis appealed the case, but the appeals court upheld the conviction.

Activist award established

LOS ANGELES (CPS) — A non-profit organization has established an annual award to recognize college students who have worked for social change in their schools and communities.

The Michael Schwerner Activist Award was named after a young civil rights worker and Cornell University gr. who was murdered in Mississippi in 1964 along with co-workers James Chaney and Andrew Goodman. The award is sponsored by the Gleitsman Foundation.

The $1,000 awards will be presented each spring to five college students who have "challenged some form of social injustice, promoted positive solutions for change and inspired others to realize that they too can make a difference."

Nomination forms must be returned by Jan. 31, 1993 and are available from the Gleitsman Foundation, 6100 Wilshire Boulevard, Suite 400, Los Angeles, Calif. 90048-5111.

Phony baloney to go, please

(CPS) — Which student body calls in the most phony pizza orders in America?

The University of Georgia, Michigan State University and the University of California at Los Angeles share the honors, according to Domino's Pizza latest survey.

More than 400 drivers and managers of stores located close to college campuses were questioned in the informal study, which was designed to find out what kinds of pizzas were most popular.

An official at Domino's said that phony orders make up 1 percent of gross business in an average year. The company reports that drivers make a practice of auctioning off pizzas in dorms where orders prove to be a prank.

Gunman threatens class

LINCOLN, Neb. (CPS) — A man armed with a semi-automatic rifle walked into a University of Nebraska classroom, pointed the weapon and pulled the trigger, but the gun apparently jammed, campus official said.

Arthur McElroy, 43, of Bennet, Neb., has been charged with attempted second-degree murder, making terroristic threats, false imprisonment and use of a firearm to commit a felony. He is being held in a county jail without bond.

"He is not talking. We don't know what the motive is," a university spokeswoman said.

The incident took place Oct. 12 in an actuarial science class. McElroy, who earned a law degree at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln and an undergraduate degree from Rutgers University, was enrolled in the class.

According to police, McElroy walked into the classroom with a loaded .30-caliber M-1 carbine, pointed it at the class and pulled the trigger, but the gun didn't go off. The 22 students scrambled out of the room, while the suspect ran to his car and was arrested about 20 minutes later. There were no injuries.

Tony Perini establishes Farmville hot spots

By Joe Nagy
Staff Writer

The name Tony Perini should ring a bell in your head. In Farmville, that name should carry along with it recollections of music, pizza, beer, and good times.

I used to go to Perini's on Tuesday nights because it was something to do, and it was fun. But once I stopped to wonder how Tony Perini ended up in this town, and it led me to interview him.

My first question was pretty direct- how in the hell did he end up here?

Tony Perini is from New Jersey, where he was a carpenter and maintenance man in the early 70's. His family owned and ran- what else?- an Italian/Pizza restaurant.

Perini enjoyed the atmosphere and, like any entrepeneur, wanted to run his own business one day. He also wanted out of the hustle and bustle of New Jersey, so he got a job with the National Park Service, using his carpentry skills.

Relocated to Richmond, he got to see a lot of rural Virginia, and in 1978, found what he thought to be the perfect spot for his pizza place.

In December, 1978, Perini's opened, though it was only half the size it is today.

The area which Perini latter added to his restaurant was originally a beauty salon. But Perini knocked out the dividing wall after they went out of business.

At that time, Perini's was the only place to get pizza in town, before the advent of Pino's, Pizza Hut, Domino's, and Little Caesars.

In the early years, Perini's thrived on the eager Longwood students' business. The drinking age varied between 18 and 19 years old, so even freshmen could fully enjoy going out.

Perini also said that the food at the dining hall in the early 80's was horrible (surprise), and at the beginning of each week, he would tape the school menu to the window, so the students would surely miss out on liver and onion night.

Today the drinking age is 21, and Blackwell has improved their food quality. Perini's may never get as packed as it did when Longwood was more serious about partying. Tony Perini has noticed- never before has he had to try so hard to lure Longwood students out during the week.

In order to get a big crowd, he must cover the school with flyers and consistently provide live entertainment.

One answer to this problem arrived in May, 1992, when the landlord of the old creamery called Perini.

It seemed that the previous owners had failed to have a profitable business.

Immediately Perini saw his chance. With the closing of the Deli and D.T.'s, the Creamery was the only big night-life attraction left.

Perini said yes to the landlord and went right to work. The Creamery became Tony's Upstairs Lounge in June, 1992.

Perini built rails around the dance platform and laid a tile floor over the bare concrete.

The summer school crowd came to provide a steady business, and the locals came on the weekends to hear country and southern rock bands.

In October, pool tables were put in the lobby and at this writing an in-house stereo system is being installed, along with recessed colored lights and a fog machine for the bands.

When asked what he likes about this small town, Perini says that he loves "being able to recognize thousands of faces. Even if I can't remember the name, it's nice to know visually 1 out of every 2 people I see. There are times when I need something and someone at the bar jumps up and says 'hey, I can help you'. What comes around goes around and if you treat people nice it really does come back to you."

Still, can someone live here forever, running two bars??

"In ten years I won't have two places- that's for sure," Says Perini. "I'll be 55 then, and I would like to slow down again."

If you are going out to Tony's soon, or Perini's, don't be afraid to offer him advice. He is doing his best to give Longwood students a relief from this stressful place. Many times people say "That band sucked" or "The cover charge is how much?" Well, go tell Tony.! He is just as upset when the students don't show up.

John Mcmahon

By Joe Nagy
Staff Writer

Think you've had a tough week? Did you lose a little change in the soda machine and let it ruin your day? Well if it does- if you are that type of person- then you should meet someone.

Chances are you have already seen him. His name is John Mcmahon, and though only a freshman in terms of college life, in reality one finds him to be well ahead of most first year students.

During Memorial Day weekend in 1985, John was skateboarding down a hill in his Falls Church, Va. neighborhood, when his weekend was rudely interrupted by an oncoming car.

John never saw the vehicle that flipped him from its windshield, only to hurl him 30 feet from the point of initial impact.

In fact, John knew nothing of the whole experience until one month later, when he woke up from a deep coma and one of his friends described it to him at bedside.

Well, end of story, right? Now he lives happily ever after, right? Well yes, he has completely relearned how to walk, and things have gotten better.

He learned to hear out of one ear and still strains to see, despite a 20% vision loss. Things do get better.

While most teenagers were out watching fireworks and playing softball that summer, John was busy trying to catch up.

His therapy progressed rapidly, for John was not to be stopped. He started seventh grade on schedule, though he only had a half day of classes.

When asked if he were bitter at anyone after the accident, he replied that he "had an entirely new appreciation for life after being so near to death. I studied hard, [and] got A's and B's instead of C's and D's."

The effort paid off, and by the end of his seventh grade year, his fellow students and teachers voted him the "Most Outstanding Student" at Cooper Intermediate School.

John's new zest for life was evident outside the classroom also. At dances, in the cafeteria, or just anywhere, he loves to meet people.

John is sure that he is "the most uninhibited person I know." Unlike most freshman, who pretty much keep to themselves in an attempt to be unobtrusive, John Edward Mcmahon III makes an effort to be noticed. He will sit down at a table in the lunchroom and kick up a conversation with whomever happens to be sitting there.

And John is no couch potato, spending his free time playing Nintendo or watching "Wayne's World" for the fifteenth time.

Chances are most people could never keep up with John. His weekly schedule reads like a Rocky movie- up at 5:30 to run, study from 6:30-7:30, breakfast at 7:30, classes, run again (he runs 60 miles a week)... Whoa!

Most students don't realize that there even is a 5:30 in the morning.

On his days off, John visits the local animal shelter to give the dogs a run.

Is this guy trying to run for president?

John loves Longwood, and he's met many people, but he still has a few suggestions as to what he would like to see improved.

"First, open the dining hall at 6:00 am, because I am tired of eating cereal in my room," said John, "and second, would someone please enforce the quiet hours on 10th floor Curry?!"

John has major plans for the future. He wants to pledge a fraternity in the spring, (his father was a charter member of an Alpha Sigma chapter in Pa.), and is thinking about majoring in sports medicine.

He also hopes to overcome his narcolepsy, a sleeping disorder which was brought on by the accident. John is currently on medication to fight it, but will occasionally fall asleep in class. His instructors are aware of this disorder, and know he is not hung-over or merely rude.

TIMEX Fitness Week held

By Kim Chapman
Rotunda Staff

The 4th Annual TIMEX Fitness Week, presented by Ocean Spray Brand fruit drinks, and sponsored by Director of Intramurals and Campus Recreation Carolyn Callaway, was held for the first time here on campus from Monday, October 19th through Sunday, October 25, 1992. TIMEX and Ocean Spray expected no fewer than 250 colleges to participate in the 2 mile fun run, walk program, and the World's Largest Aerobics Class.

Longwood's participation didn't begin until Wednesday, October 21st due to fall break. Despite having just returned to campus, more than 30 students, faculty, and staff laced up their running shoes for the 2 mile loop around school and the chance to win prizes offered by the corporate sponsors.

First place in the run went to Pete Ruange with a time of 10:52. Rounding out the top three were Mark Heoberg at 12:10 and Anthony Dickens at 12:15. The top female finisher was Gabby Suydam with a time of 15:07.

Thursday saw the World's Largest Aerobics Class make its way into Lancer Hall for the 8pm start. The idea of the world's largest class dealt with every participating college to begin the class at exactly the same time, thus creating a huge number of aerobicizers around the country. Forty-five Longwood students entered the class and had a fun-filled and healthy evening.

Last, but certainly not least, the TIMEX FITNESS WEEK sponsored a walk program throughout the duration of the week's events. Individuals' recorded their walked miles and turned them in to determine the winner. Brenda Ferguson finished 1st with 34.5 miles, while Vivian Bommer and Sandi Scarborough recorded 22.8 and 18.5 miles to win 2nd and 3rd places, respectively.

Although this was the first time Longwood had participated in the Fitness Week, Callaway was quoted as saying, "Considering it was the first year, we had a lot of students participating. All in all, everyone was excited and pleased with the whole week. We are looking forward to next year with better organization, more events, and the full week of fun."

The Greek organizations at the university reacted strongly to the incident, officials said. The school's sororities have refused to participate in Pi Kappa Phi's annual philanthropic War of the Roses football tournament this year.

The ruling against the fraternity was unexpected, although welcomed, said Jonathan Burns, managing editor of the Red and Black, the campus newspaper. "The students seem very pleased with the decision."

Pi Kappa Phi is the seventh fraternity to be suspended from the University of Georgia campus since 1980.

Fall break trip to Orlando retold

By Kim Chapman
Rotunda Staff

"M-I-C, See you real soon"— Not!
"K-E-Y, Why?"— Because I have no money left!
"M-O-U-S-E"

It has been a month since my mother and I ventured down south to the land of cartoon mice, ducks and dogs, and I am just now able to clear my mind of that oh-so-cheery club starring everyone's favorite, Annette Funicello.

While the majority of you were busy loading basket after basket of dirty laundry for mom to wash over Fall Break, I boarded a plane bound for Orlando, Florida and Walt Disney World.

I arrived in Orlando shortly after 9:30 P.M. but didn't actually get to the hotel until after 3 A.M., due to my mother's delayed plane and a mix-up at the rental car agency.

Let's just say that I was not a happy traveler when the operator called the next morning at 8 A.M. to let us know it was time to start spending our money.

And spend some money, we did. After drawing straws to decide where to begin our adventure, we decided to tour Disney/ MGM Studios. Getting there was no problem— we found the place easily, paid $4 for parking, and caught a tram (what exactly is a tram?) to the ticket windows.

We then purchased a 4-day pass. This was not only more economical than buying a ticket each day, it also allowed us unlimited access to all 3 Disney parks (Magic Kingdom, MGM Studios, and Epcot Center) at any time during our stay, and the 4 days could be at any time in our life-not just this trip.

Someone told us that MGM was more of a kids' type place with attractions such as the Little Mermaid, Beauty and the Beast, Star Wars, and The Muppets, to name just a few. I am definitely not ashamed to say I had a blast at each of the above events; I think my mother had even more fun than I did!

The highlight of MGM was the Backstage Tour to the costume department, movie and television sets, and the prop/lighting/camera sections of this working production set. Catastrophe Canyon was the focal point of this tour as the tram (there's that tram again) conveniently stopped on a very rickety road while we were treated to explosions, rumblings, and the release of over 70 million gallons of rushing water. We were then told the secret of the canyon— special effects crews programmed each movement into a computer so each person witnesses the same thing.

Another attraction I enjoyed was the Superstar Television Show. Actual members of the audience are chosen to act out famous scenes from shows such as "Cheers", "Gilligan's Island", "The Golden Girls" and "I Love Lucy". Of course, the actual stars were not there; instead, the audience member was filmed doing his or her part and then video-spliced into the original episode of the show to make it appear real.

We ended up spending all day at MGM, so at 7 P.M., we caught the shuttle to Epcot Center. This proved to be a good move since a majority of the tourists had already left and the waiting time for rides was less than 5 minutes.

Epcot Center, or "Experimental Prototype Community Of Tomorrow", is not meant for young children, in the rides or games sense. As an adult, I could fully appreciate the attractions of each individual building.

Especially interesting was the new center devoted to the human body. There was a great ride (I can say that after downing a bottle of Pepto Bismol) that took us on a mission inside the finger to remove a splinter. The "ride" was just a car on suspension systems that jerked us around as we watched a huge projection screen to create the feeling of dodging white blood cells and capillaries.

The next day, we chose to stray from Disney and headed to Universal Studios. If I remember correctly, admission was $35 per person, but we soon found out it was worth every penny.

Universal is the home of Nickelodeon Studios, so we took a backstage tour. It was OK — once again, my mother had a more enjoyable time, especially watching some poor girl from the audience get the infamous "slime" dumped on her head.

The main attractions at Universal were the E.T. Ride, with hundreds of the terrestrial in all sizes, wishing you luck as you try to save their planet; Back to the Future — another car ride with the movement sensations; Earthquake — The Ride, a simulated experience of surviving a 7.8 earthquake in California; and the Kongfrontation— a trolley car ride through the streets of New York as the giant ape is coming after you.

I felt that MGM was the better place to see the behind-the-scenes stuff while Universal was better for rides. Both were lots of fun, very clean, and set up nicely.

We spent one full day at Epcot, after only managing to see it for two hours the first night. With the futuristic music, architecture and overall future-living theme, I couldn't help but feel as if I'd stepped into the 21st century. The technology was astounding, from plants growing in midair in The Land, to the computer generated games in Land of Imagination.

The final day in Orlando was spent at the Magic Kingdom. We didn't have much time due travel arrangements, shopping and other unplanned events, so we only went on two rides. That was okay with me, as I have been there before and knew what to expect.

The newest attraction to the Kingdom is "Splash Mountain", a log flume featuring the story of Brer Rabbit through the mountain before plunging 3 stories through the Briar Patch to rescue the rabbit and his friends.

The other "ride" was not actually an amusement, but more of a knowledge-supplied ride through certain buildings, including Space Mountain. It was interesting going inside the Mountain this time because there was a major renovation going on and all the lights had been turned on, instead of the usual blackness.

I left 85 degree weather in Orlando to return to 45 degrees in Farmville and another fun-filled week of classes. I cannot remember such a great time over fall break; I did not regret going back to dirty clothes at all, and would do it again in a Mickey Mouse heartbeat.

Fragrence makes the man: Versace and Joop!, set the mood

In this fast-paced, cut throat, pseudo-social conscience world, the need to be presentable and acceptable is a must.

Not only in what a man wears or what he has on his feet, but also in the way he smells like. Any red-blooded, American woman can tell you that a well placed dab of "Eternity" is an instant turn on. So for all you fellows out there, here are some tips.

For everyday endeavors around campus, fragrences like "Giorgio," "Obsession," and "Claiborne," which are very popular scents, are enough to turn female heads as you go from class to class.

For weekend events, try the abstract, yet compelling scent of "Joop!," or the fruitiness of "Fahrenheit." And for the more "laid back heart-breaker," try the egnimatic scent of 'Cool Water."

When your significant other insists that you spend some quality romantic time with her because your relationship is stagnent, shock her with a splash of the ever popular scent of "Eternity."

Or try something new, such as "Versus," by Gianni Versace. To add some unexpected kick to the mood, try Elizabeth Taylors' "Passion" for men.

For those dréaded job interviews, making a statement with your odor is too risky. If you must wear something, the subtleness of "Drakkar Noir" or "Xeryus," by Givenchy, is suitable.

Wearing a fragrence is only recommended to add that bit of confidence needed to confront an intimidating potential boss.

But if you already have an inate sense of confidence your natural scent, go with it.

Please guys, remember that it's nice to show you are a man, but you should do so smelling like one, not like Mr. Goodwrench or Tarzan.

Chamber Music Concert to be presented on Nov. 19 at 8pm in Wygal Recital Hall by Joanne Kong, harpsichordist. She will perform works by J.S. Bach, D. Scarlatti and F. Couperin

Leather Hot This Winter

Leather, usually encasing one's feet or draped over shoulders in jacket form. At it's best it is worn, yet still shiney.

Form fitting, yet almost always in black (which is still the preferred color of bikers and those fellows who dwell in the world of the underground).

But as an alternative to the alternative, I present to you the white (or off-white) leather jacket in the traditional biker-style.

The white leather jacket offers a fresh new look when worn with a sleek black T-shirt, and basic black, form fitting pants, and of course finishing of the ensamble with the shoes.

This combination is an abstract, and striking way of looking at black and white, but hey, shock the world.

And what makes a white leather jacket so appealing is that it is very hard to find, and will probably cost anywhere from $500 to $1,000.

Shamen's boss drum offers industrial rock

By Slackmaster J

The Shamen
Boss Drum
1992

The British group, The Shamen, has come out with a new release, Boss Drum. It is an album with great variety and new sound.

The Shamen's last great hit was 1991's "Move Any Mountain," which hit #1 on the charts in the U.K.

This industrial dance music is played at some of the downtown clubs in Washington D.C., most notably the Fifth Column, famous for its packed Monday nights.

The Shamen's first song on the new release is the title track "Boss Drum," which is a highly rhythmic piece with background drum noise and new sound.

Probably their best dance song, "(LSI) Love Sex Intelligence," which should go quite far on the charts.

"Ebeneezer Goode," the fifth song, is another rhythmic, new sound piece.

Their most unique song is the sixth on the track, "Comin On," which starts out like some of Led Zeppelin's songs.

This song is the closest thing to Country Industrial music.

"Phorever People," the seventh track, is also a favorite. It sounds like the British group, Yaz, in some parts of the song.

I highly recommend this album. It has already had an impact in the U.K. and will hopefully have a similar impact here.

A DISPATCH FROM SPY MAGAZINE

The Usual Suspects

Foulmouthed left-wing radio personality Casey Kasem decided to do something nice, in a publicity-generating sort of way, for his daughter Liberty's second birthday. At a party for her, to which Kasem had invited megastars such as David Hasselhoff, the highlight was supposed to be a trained sea lion. As guests looked on aghast, Kasem's dainty, heart-shaped swimming pool, in which the animal was performing, turned a deep shade of sea-lion-excrement brown.

There were no defecating aquatic mammals at the party Tina Brown threw as her last act as Vanity Fair's editor—the sea lion would never have dared. During her final days at Vanity Fair, Tina's tradition of petty micromanagement was carried on against VF cover girl Ivana Trump after she splashed herself on the covers of Penthouse and Lear's. When Mrs. Trump's people asked Tina's people for a few free copies, they were told no—they would have to go out and buy them. A few weeks earlier, when Brown and the Bravo cable network were cohosting a party, some little nobody from Bravo sent her a pre-party note addressing her simply as "Tina." Brown was made apoplectic by the presumption and actually had an assistant call Bravo and berate them for the lapse. Fortunately for Brown, Ivana isn't as excitable as Sylvester Stallone. After Brown called the action figure "a joke" in a TV interview, he reportedly fumed to a friend, If I'm ever at a party with that bitch, I'll kill her.

At this time of year, window-shopping is a favorite pastime of all New Yorkers, and one romantic evening, Mike Nichols and Diane Sawyer gazed for a long time at the pricey wares of a store on Madison Avenue. Their arms entwined, Mike and Diane stared bewitched; she nuzzled his shoulder, and he kissed her brow. They were not looking into an antiques store, however, or a boutique, but rather into Lobel's, a fashionable butcher. Let's skip the movie, one spouse must have said to the other over dinner, and just go look at some meat.

IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $340,000* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $227 each month to reach the same goal.

Even if you're not counting the years to retirement, you can count on TIAA-CREF to help you build the future you deserve—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Lack of access; insufficient space cited as problems

Longwood's Library fails to serve all student's needs

By Jennie Fennell
Staff Writer

Our new library — is it a helpful resource or a grand waste of space?

It is evident that the library has many problems. There are some improvements, but the students still fiercely complain.

One of the most common inquiries is why aren't all the books and magazines available on open shelves?

According to acting Library Director, Rebecca Laine, there is less stack space than user and service space.

The new, and as yet unnamed, library has seating space for 99, seven classrooms, five small-group study rooms, and 26 individual carrels. Therefore, it is possible for groups to hold classes or workshops.

Although the shelves on the Library of Congress side of the library seem nearly empty, there is not enough room to shelve all the material.

However, as students request books from the basement, the books are shelved when they are returned.

Another complaint is that it is confusing to have two classification systems. Mrs. Laine agrees. "We adopted the Library of Congress system back in 1984, because it is better suited to the needs of the larger libraries. We already had about 175,000 volumes in the Dewey system, and no extra money to reclassify them."

Some students also wonder why they are not allowed to browse through the books located in the ground floor of the library.

The reasoning behind this is that the ground floor space is not completely finished. The flooring, ventilation, and lighting do not meet the same standards as the user area. It was never intended for public use.

Another complaint is that the photocopying process takes too long and often one or more of the machines are broken.

One possible solution to this problem, as well as an additional source of in revenue, would be the adoption of the copycard system.

This has worked well at other colleges. A card can be purchased for one dollar, allowing the user 20 copies.

Each time the cardholder uses the photocopier, he or she inserts the card and it is validated.

The suggested incentive for this is to raise the price of each copy to ten cents if using coins, but keep the price of five cents for those using the card. The increase in price could be the source of money to buy new copiers. This system could begin as early as this spring.

The library is not open every night until midnight due to the lack of funds.

"When the state's budget problems were at their worst, the library began closing at 10 p. m. instead of 11 p.m. Last year, the college provided funds to restore the lost hours. It was decided to keep the library open during the busiest part of the semester," comments Mrs. Laine.

The library is now open until midnight Monday through Thursday, and Sunday.

The transition of moving into a larger building requires re-arrangement of the whole system. More people joined the staff this year, as well as specialists and technicians.

There is a complaint box in the library. The staff is also open to suggestions.

Mrs. Laine offers this advice: "If people knew the reasoning behind the library's problems, they would better understand. They could make helpful suggestions, too."

Longwood College student organizations are banding together in December to promote awareness of the plight of individuals who are stricken with Acquired Immune Deficiency - A.I.D.S., and to help the effort to halt the spread of this deadly disease which is taking its toll among all groups in our society. These organizations will be making red ribbon bows, which will be distributed in the Rotunda area of Ruffner on December 1, 1992 -- A.I.D.S. Awareness Day.

Any student or organization interested in helping with this project, please contact Dr. Chrys Kosarchyn at 2543.

Thank you.

GRE test offered for first time on computer

many minutes are left in each 35-minute section so test takers can pace themselves. Like the traditional test, there are six operational sections and one pretest section, but on the computer test a student can go on to the next section without waiting.

The computer and paper version of the test are the same: each contains sections that measure verbal, quantitative and analytical abilities.

The computer test is offered more frequently. The paper-and-pencil test is offered five times a year, while the computer test will be available at Sylvan Centers on Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays. University test will vary from school to school.

Schools participating in the computerized testing include MSU, Arizona State University, University of Arizona, Miami-Dade Community College, Xavier University in New Orleans, University of Houston, and Norfolk State University.

About 1,200 students participated in field trials earlier this year, and most liked the results, Kuh said. There were no significant differences in results from field computer tests and paper-and-pencil tests, she said.

The scores will be reported to institutions within three weeks, rather than the four to six weeks with the traditional test.

"We are really excited about this. It will be a nice alternative," said MSU's Trevarthen.

10 Veterans back for upcoming season

Basketball team looks solid

With 10 veteran players, four starters and some talented recruits on hand, Longwood men's basketball coach Ron Carr is excited about the Lancers' possibilities for the upcoming season.

"We are fortunate to have a large group of experienced players returning," said Carr. "I feel good about our depth and experience level. The opportunity to be a solid team exists. I am excited about the possibilities of this group."

Longwoods opens play Nov. 23-24 in the Rotary Dixie Classic at Gardner-Webb College in Boiling Springs, N.C.. The Lancers will play Gardner-Webb at 7:00 and Pfeiffer faces the Volna All-Stars at 9:00 in opening round action on the 23rd. On the following night, Longwood will play Pfeiffer at 7:00 while G-W plays Volna at 9:00.

The Lancers face a pair of tough foes right off the bat. Pfeiffer has been ranked among the top three small college teams in the country by Street & Smith's, while Gardner-Webb is the defending South Atlantic Conference regular season champ.

The Lancers will open their home schedule Dec. 4-5 in the 10th Par-Bil's Tip-Off Tournament. Longwood will play Davis & Elkins at 7:00 while Wingate and District of Columbia will square off at 9:00 in the other opening round contest.

Lancers 14-14 Last Season

Carr, now is his third season at the helm of NCAA Division II independent Longwood, guided a young team to a 14-14 mark last year. Now 25-31 over two seasons, the Lancer coach has had two years to bolster his program with an infusion of fresh faces. Carr is optimistic about the season ahead.

"Our players worked hard to be competitive last year," said the coach. "They faced an extremely difficult schedule that was loaded with quality teams. At times our youth really showed. However, we improved quite a bit over the course of the season. Hopefully, playing the strong schedule last year has made us more mature and helped us prepare for this year."

Longwood Basketball Outlook 2-2-2

Longwood will draw strength from a group of five players who either started or logged considerable playing time last season. The most experienced inside performers are 6-3 junior MVP Charles Brown, 6-6 senior Bryan Weaver and 6-4 senior Chuck Laster. Starting guards back from a year ago are 6-0 junior Michael Druitt and 6-3 sophomore J.B. Neill.

In 1991-92 Brown averaged 13.4 pts. and 5.1 rebs., Weaver 13 pts. and 6.8 rebs. and Laster 9.1 pts. and 4.6 rebs. Druitt averaged 7.4 pts., while leading the team in assists with 108 and steals with 41. Neill, who tied or broke several game and season records for 3-point shooting, scored 9.5 ppg. while hitting 89.3 percent of his free throws.

Behind this group are three players who made key contributions inspite of injuries, and a pair of valuable backcourt reserves. Senior swing player Keith Crabtree who stands 6-3, 6-4 sophomore Matt Watkins and 6-7 junior Adam Huffman will play important roles for the Lancers this year. Reserve guards Buddy Whitehurst, a 6-3 junior, and 6-1 sophomore Tony Wools both have a year's experience under their belts.

Longwood's seven-member freshman class includes players with size, athletic ability and talent. Incoming backcourt players are 5-9 Devone Johnson, and 6-0 William Foxx. In the frontcourt are 6-6 Benji Webb, 6-7 Joe Jones, 6-6 Eddie Shelburne, 6-7 Aaron Bortz and 6-5 E.G. Reid.

For the first time in recent years Longwood will field a junior varsity team with new assistant coach Scott Davis serving as the leader of the jayvees. Ten games are currently on tap for the junior varsity. With a total of 17 players on the Lancer squad, the junior varsity concept will allow some of the young players to gain additional playing time.

Through the first 10 days of practice Longwood was hit with just one major injury. Reserve guard Tony Wools suffered a severely sprained ankle and will be sidelined for several weeks. Coach Carr said that senior Chuck Laster has been looking particularly good in practice.

"Chuck has played consistently well in practice," said Carr. "He seems more focused than last year. I'm hoping he keeps it up."

Carr feels the Lancers must improve defensively if they hope to realize their potential in the upcoming season.

"As always our goal will be to raise our level of play each game," said Carr. "In order to do so we must become better defensively. We are going to work hard to improve this phase of our play."

Lancers fall in VISA playoffs

Randolph-Macon used a first half goal from leading scorer Mike Henning to hand host Longwood a 1-0 defeat in a Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association Playoff game Wednesday afternoon.

Henning, scoring his eighth goal of the season, broke loose and raced down field before booting a shot into the right corner of the Longwood goal with 25:10 left in the opening period. His break was set up when the Lancers lost control near midfield while attacking the R-MC goal.

The Jackets, who have given up just 13 goals all season, successfully blunted Longwood's comeback hopes in the second half. Randolph-Macon moved its record to 14-6-1 for the year.

Longwood, which had eight shots to R-MC's 10, finished the season at 10-8-1. The Lancers were forced to play without senior back Jason Casano, who sat out the game after receiving a red card in a game last Saturday.

After Randolph-Macon dominated the first half, Longwood increased the intensity of its attack in the second half. The Lancers had several good scoring opportunities, but were unable to cash in. It was the final college game for Casano and fellow-seniors Byron Edwards, Todd Dyer, Alan Kidd and T.J. Shepardson.

Randolph-Macon dropped a 2-1 decision to Mary Washington Saturday in Ashland as the Eagles won the 1992 VISA title. MWC had beaten Virginia Wesleyan 2-0 Wednesday in Norfolk to advance to the finals.

Newcomers key to Lady Lancer hoop success

With just five returning players, and only two with any real playing experience, the success of the 1992-93 edition of Longwood's NCAA Division II women's basketball team will depend largely on the development of this year's freshman recruits.

Longwood begins its record 14-game home schedule hosting the C & L/Lady Lancer Invitational Friday night and Saturday afternoon. Carson-Newman faces Francis Marion Friday at 6:00, while Longwood plays Virginia Union at 8:00. The consolation and championship games are slated for Saturday afternoon at 2:00 and 4:00.

Finishing 8-18 a year ago, 10th-year head coach Shirley Duncan, assisted by Loretta Coughlin, hopes for a quick transition from her talented incoming class.

"Obviously, we will be a very young team," commented Duncan. "But we have a good nucleus returning and some very talented freshmen. Their progress and transition will play a vital role in how we fair this season.

"We'll be more exciting to watch this year with more running and pressing. Defensively, we intend to press endline-to-endline. Offensively, the three-pointer will be an integral part."

Among the returning players are the junior duo of captain Cassie Ensley and Ana Litton. Ensley, a 5-6 guard, averaged 14.7 points last season. Additionally, Ensley handed out a team-high 133 assists and made 59 steals while sinking a school-record 54 three-pointers shooting 41 percent from the promised land. She is first in Longwood career three-point field goals with 95, as well as first in three-point shooting percentage at .351.

"Cassie will play primarily at the two-guard position, which is her more natural position," comments Duncan. "She will be more effective as an off-guard. Cassie will also give us outstanding leadership in her role as team captain."

Litton, a 5-8 guard/forward, averaged a team-high 14.9 points in 1991-92. Litton also averaged 4.6 rebounds, made a team-leading 70 steals and contributed 76 assists. Her 27 three-pointers was second on the squad and she additionally ranks among the top five at LC in career three-pointers and three-point field goal shooting percentage.

"Ana is the best athlete on our team," said Duncan. "She'll see most of her action at the small forward spot. Her experience at guard last year will enable her to utilize her skills better at small forward, adding versatility to her game as well as ours."

Things get interesting at this point. The other three returning players, senior Cari Dellinger, along with sophomores Kirsten Hillgaard and Sonia Williams, have little playing experience. Dellinger, a 6-1 forward/center, averaged 2.8 points and 3.0 rebounds in limited time a year ago.

Women's Basketball Preview 2-2-2

"Cari is in an excellent situation to earn lots of playing time," says Duncan. "She has nice moves around the basket and I know Cari is eager for the challenge."

Hillgaard, a 6-2 center, and Williams, a 5-4 guard, each saw very little playing time last season. Hillgaard scored 10 points and grabbed 16 rebounds, while Williams scored 27 points with 19 boards seeing action in 18 and 19 games respectively.

"Kirsten could see lots of playing time, and her size makes her intimidating on the court," comments Duncan. "Sonia walked-on and earned a scholarship last year as a point guard, but will be more effective as an off-guard this season with the opportunity for more playing time."

Five newcomers join the program. They include Amy Bradley, Kerri Johnson, Sheri Llewellyn, Charity Owens, and Lisa Riddlebarger.

Bradley, a 5-8 guard, is from Lloyd C. Bird High School. She averaged 13 points, seven assists, five steals, and four rebounds her senior season and will add versatility to the team with her outstanding athletic ability.

Johnson, a 5-4 point guard, averaged 21.3 points, 6.7 assists, and 4.2 rebounds for Riverheads High last year. Johnson is a tough competitor and possesses the ability to lead the team on the break. She's hard-nosed defensively as well.

Llewellyn, a 5-10 forward, is from Amelia County High School and scored over 1,000 points in her prep career. She plays with a lot of heart according to Duncan and is capable of playing inside with her back to the basket, or outside shooting the three-pointer.

Owens, a 5-11 forward, averaged 9.6 points and 8.8 rebounds at Loudoun Valley High last season. She attended the same high school as former Longwood guard Tena Philbrick ('92), now attending graduate school at Northeastern Louisiana. Owens has great athleticism and can run the court very well. Her dedication and desire should enable her to develop quickly at Longwood.

Riddlebarger, a 5-5 point guard, led Brookville High School to an 82-15 record in her four years as a starter. She's a smart player at both ends of the court and should see plenty of playing time this season.

Longwood's schedule also includes the prestigious Dial Soap Classic hosted by West Chester University Dec. 4-5, a tourney which also includes Division II powers Bentley and Lock Haven. Bentley was 31-2 last year advancing to the Division II Final Four.

Excessive alcohol use leads to accidents

By Dr Nicholas A. Pace

(AP) It is well-documented that drinking causes many of the automobile accidents reported each year. What is less publicized, however, is that alcohol plays a large role in other types of accidents as well.

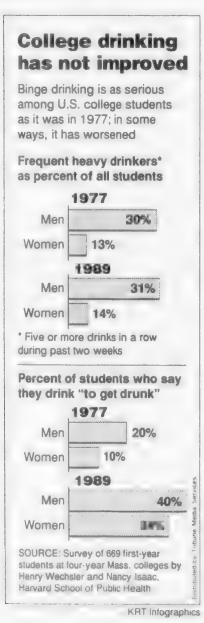
Some studies have shown, for example, that alcoholics are seven times more likely that nonalcoholics to meet with fatal accidents of all types.

These include an astonishing number of deaths from fire and asphyxiation because of alcohol-related carelessness, such as falling asleep with a lighted cigarette or leaving flammable materials too near the burners of a kitchen range.

Many boating accidents and drownings also are connected to overconsumption of alcoholic beverages.

Too much booze tends to make some people foolhardy and take chances they never would dream of risking when cold sober. They extend themselves far beyond their limit, or have a false sense of security in their capabilities or equipment.

There has been an increase in alcohol-related accidents involving various forms of transportation, including motorcycles, light planes, snowmobiles, sailboats and even cross-country skiing.



Drinking also has been pinpointed as a factor in many home accidents, such as falling off ladders, getting cut with knives and other sharp instruments. Whole new areas of disaster are found in power mowers, power saws and power hedge trimmers for the unwary overdrinker. The amateur gardener or gentleman farmer who likes to guzzle beer while operating these dangerous tools may well end up cutting something more delicate and painful than grass or wood.

The negative effects of alcohol on the mental processes has led to countless fires, scaldings and serious burns, both outdoors and in the home. Nothing mixes more dangerously than the alcohol in several cocktails and the fuel in a nearby outdoor grill.

Statistics indicate that alcohol is a direct factor in almost 50 percent of all accidental deaths, whether on the highway, in fires, on the water or in falls.

In most cases, the victims probably never anticipated the danger of mixing alcohol with what otherwise might have been perfectly normal pursuits.

The slogan, "if you drive, don't drink; if you drink, don't drive," applies equally as well to just about any situation involving the operation of machines or mechanical equipment.

College requests budget amendments

By Debbie Wilson
Staff Writer

Since the General Assembly authorized additional full-time teaching positions at Longwood in 1988, the enrollment growth has risen by 7%. It seems Longwood does not have the money to keep up with this unexpected growth.

Therefore, the Business Affairs office will be requesting budget amendments to its 1992-94 budget for new funds from the General Assembly through lobbying until February 7.

This will be done for two reasons. First, the college is requesting a base budget increase of $250,000 for part-time/adjunct faculty.

This is a result of the rising enrollment and state mandated curricular changes. The full cost of funding these additional positions is $469,502. Without this money, the college cannot meet its teaching needs.

Also in response to mandated changes, the college requires education students to take two field practica. This results in a need for increased faculty field supervision of student teachers.

In addition to this is the rising popularity of the Teacher Education Program.

The number of student teachers has grown from 120 in 1988 to 248 in 1992. Growth above 300 is expected for next year.

College administrators are also identifying an increased number of students majoring in Psychology and English. Therefore, more of these courses must be offered each semester, which increases the need for adjunct faculty in these fields.

The second request is for a $275,000 budget increase to pay the debt on the new IBM mainframe computer. This computer was purchased through a finance agreement with IBM.

The old mainframe had been purchased secondhand in 1985 from Old Dominion University. In 1992 it had reached its capacity and could no longer support the demands of the college or the state mandated changes and updates.

Also, IBM planned to drop the maintenance support of the computer system in April of 1993.

The purchase price of the new mainframe was $1.9 million.

The college must pay off an annual $450,000 required over four years, with a fifth payment of $341,162.

Therefore, Longwood is requesting money for the annual debt service with the anticipation that the Legislature will fund the additional payments.

2 airmen implicated

Dead sailer's mom supports lifting gay ban

CHICAGO (AP) When Dorothy Hajdys last talked with her 22-year-old sailor son, he promised he would be home soon. The next time she saw him, he was in a coffin beaten to death.

A Sturgis, Mich., airman has been convicted in the case and a Westland, Mich., airman could face a merLer prosecution.

Seaman Allen Schindler was killed in Japan, a month after he told the Navy he was gay. His mother grieves, but hopes President Clinton's plan to lift the military ban on homosexuals will shield others from tragedy.

"It's too late for Allen," said Mrs. Hajdys . "But maybe this will save someone else's life."

"I think the ban should be lifted," she added. "But it's not going to do anything unless the military is educated. ... There are crazy people out there. They think gays are going to harm them."

Schindler's death last October has become a rallying point for homosexual activists, who contend it was a classic case of gay bashing. They've held a memorial service in San Diego, where the seaman lived before his ship traveled to Japan, and a candlelight vigil in Washington.

Mrs. Hajdys, a 46-year-old bookkeeper, attended both events. But she's not convinced her son was gay, though he told her he was in 1991.

"I never really believed him," she said, remembering how in fourth grade she was called to school because her son was kissing the little girls and was called "the Kissing Bandit."

"I knew he was confused," she said. "It doesn't matter if he was or wasn't. No one had a right to kill him."

In Japan, the Navy recently held the military equivalent of a grand jury hearing to determine whether Airman Apprentice Terry M. Helvey, 21, of Westland, Mich., will stand trial for murder.

Another seaman, Airman Apprentice Charles A. Vins, 20, pleaded guilty at a November court-martial to lesser charges of concealing a crime and resisting arrest. He agreed to testify against Helvey under a pretrial agreement.

Vins, of Sturgis, Mich., was sentenced to one year in custody and given a bad conduct discharge, according to Navy officials.

"What would you think if your son were killed by his own?" Mrs. Hajdys asked. "If we were at war, these would have been the people who were supposed to protect him."

Mrs. Hajdys, who divorced Schindler's father when the boy was 4, later remarried and is now widowed, said she's disappointed in the Navy.

She learned many details of her son's death from the military newspaper Stars and Stripes.

"I keep asking the Navy for the motive," she said. "They keep telling me they don't know yet."

Schindler's body was found Oct. 27 in a public restroom in Sasebo, Japan, the home base of his ship, USS Belleau Wood.

When Mrs. Hajdys saw her mutilated son in the funeral home, she didn't recognize him.

"You couldn't even identify my son," she said. "His nose was even with his lips. His head was caved in. His eyes were back by his ears. All but two of his ribs were broken. ... There were two lacerations on his penis."

Her daughter asked the funeral home to undo his sleeves and he was identified by two tattoos _ a tiger and an emblem of the USS Midway, the ship he served on and loved before transferring to the Belleau Wood in 1991.

Schindler was miserable on the amphibious assault ship.

"He told me he didn't have to worry about dying and going to hell, he was already there," Hajdys said. "The ship was like hell."

He even had the stitching on a hat changed to read "Helleau Wood."

Friends, his mother said, reported her son was harassed, punched and called a fag. Others told her another gay man on the ship was assaulted.

Navy officials say they have no record of Schindler complaining about harassment.

Twelve hours before he died, he phoned his mother at her home in south suburban Chicago Heights. "He said he was getting out of the Navy. He would be home before Christmas for good. He was going to go to college."

The next day she received word her son was dead.

After Schindler's friends told Mrs. Hajdys her son kept a diary, she contacted the Navy. A few weeks ago, she received a photocopy of the nearly 70-page journal.

In one troubling October entry, he wrote: "More people are finding out about me. It scares me a little. You never know who would want to injure me or cease my existence."

Mrs. Hajdys says that in recent weeks, she has learned much about discrimination against gays. But her crusade is for her son - not a movement.

"I'm not doing this for the gays," she said. "There are a lot of people hearing about what's happened to my son that wouldn't have heard otherwise."

"I don't want this to happen to anybody else's son." Or to another of her own.

Her 17-year-old, William, had talked with a Navy recruiter, but has since changed his mind.

"There's no way he's going in," she said. "They killed my one son. No way they're going to touch the other one."

Arab-Americans accused by Israel of having links with Hamas

JERUSALEM (AP) Israel said Sunday that two Arab-Americans detained in the West Bank are suspected of distributing hundreds of thousands of dollars to rebuild a radical Muslim movement in the occupied territories.

Army and government statements said Mohammed Salah, 39, and Mohammed Jarad, 36, both from the Chicago area, were believed to be high-ranking activists of Hamas in the United States and had links to the movement in England.

Families of the men in the United States denied earlier reports that Jarad and Salah were linked to Hamas. Jarad was born in the West Bank town of Ramallah and Salah was born in Jerusalem, and relatives said they had returned to visit family.

The men were arrested Monday amid reports by Israeli news media and officials that tied Palestinians in the United States to Hamas.

The reports coincided with an attempt by Israel to deflect international condemnation of its Dec. 17 expulsion of some 400 Palestinians to Lebanon. Israel said the Palestinians were linked to radical Muslim groups that killed six soldiers in early December.

Hamas, founded in 1987 in the early days of the Palestinian uprising, wants Israel and the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip to become an Islamic state.

An Israeli security official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Salah and Jarad signed confessions outlining their links to Hamas and were being held in a military prison in the occupied territories.

He said the men, who have lived in the United States about 20 years, had not yet been charged.

A third American citizen who lives near Ramallah was arrested several days earlier but was being investigated in a separate case, the official said. He identified the man as Mohammed Tawfik Hajji. News reports said he might have family in Virginia.

The security official said Salah and Jarad had access to $650,000 through bank transfers in the United States and transactions with currency dealers in the West Bank and were distributing the money to Hamas activists.

He said $100,000 was found in Salah's hotel room.

An army statement said that the men's arrests led to the capture of 40 Hamas activists in the occupied territories and that more arrests were expected.

PERSPECTIVES

College support of greek system questioned

There are many different types of organizations on campus, all espousing a variety of aims and agendas. These range form governance to student advocacy to entertainment to departmental interests to information. However all, regardless of number of members or stature in the eyes of the "Longwood community," share an underlying goal; to enrich, in some way, the lives of students.

Why then is one group of student organizations accorded privileges and prestige far outweighing those enjoyed by every other type of student group? Who are these paragons of student activity?

These groups are the social greek organizations.

Though all these groups claim to perform some type of public service, their primary activities are purely social.

It is grossly unfair that a mere 22 discriminatory groups (let's get real gang, not too many poorly-dressed, overly-intellectual "social losers" manage to find their way into the elite groups that make up the social greek scene, and even if everyone had an equal chance of getting in, there only so many places available) out of the over 150 organizations currently open to students receive the lion's share of attention and support from the college.

It's not quite clear on what makes these groups so very special...could it be that these are the "nice" students- well-dressed, well-bred, well-behaved, and with plenty of money- not the types who cause trouble or embarrassment for college administrators or who sully the image of this Platonic collegian ideal that is Longwood College?

Well, whatever it is, they sure have managed to create quite a scam and are reaping in the benefits of it. What could be easier? Conform to the mold of the perfect college student and win these valuable prizes:

1) The glowing approval and almost sycophantic adoration of many college administrators... after all, this is what college should be- everything went to hell after the sixties, anyway.

2) A grossly disproportionate amount of space in campus buildings. SGA, for example, a group which represents the entire student body and to which every student belongs, is only supplied with one, closet-sized cubicle. Social greek organizations, on the other hand, have large chapter rooms. There is even a "sorority dorm."

3) A number of plaques in the Rotunda area commemorating "significant" events in the greek history of the college. There are also a number of signs for every social greek organization on campus in the Blackwell dining hall, reinforcing the claim that a number of social greek groups make on a number of the tables there.

4) Other leadership positions on campus. A majority of those serving on the Honor Board, Judicial Board, and SGA (dogged by the omnipresent, annual rumors of election tampering by greek organizations), as well as many more of the more popular and prestigious (a.k.a. "resume filler") student groups on campus.

5) Good jobs. Many R.A.'s on campus belong to a social greek organization - applications are even turned in to the Office of Greek Affairs.

6) A full-time, college-paid administrator to coordinate the activities of and deal with problems with the social greek system, as well as usually having at least two faculty/staff advisors.

7) Listings in the official Faculty and Staff phone directory (while only twelve non-greek organizations rate a listing, almost every single fraternity and sorority, as well as the Panhellenic and Interfraternity Council managed to be included).

Most bothersome is that not even a simple majority of the student body takes an active part of the social greek scene.

So. When is the Sociology/ Anthropology Club going to receive spacious offices on campus? When is the Accounting Club going to get its own full-time publicist and recruiter, which seems to be the basic function served by the Greek Affairs Coordinator.

Why is Longwood investing so much money (a large portion of which was supplied by "non-greek" students and their parents) and effort in groups whose roles on campus are questionable at best? These are groups whose roots are based upon two of the most foul human traits imaginable: discrimination and violence. Sure, they are no longer tying people up in caves or killing each other with alcohol poisoning: they are socially acceptable now (though their track record on discrimination is still a little murky), and a number of very nice people are involved in social greek fraternities and sororities, but remember, for a while there it was trendy to be a member of the Hitler Youth, too.

There is no reason for this institution's unreasonable support of this system except that the school is again putting its priorities in the wrong order.

Again, we have nothing against the greek system itself. It does serve a purpose for some people who choose to belong to it. However, it is the extreme emphasis placed on this relatively small portion of the student population that is unfair.

As usual, instead of lauding intellectual achievement and promoting independent thought, Longwood is tacitly, no, make that blatantly showing that the best way to succeed is through social achievement and groupthink.

Way to go, Longwood. You've really made it clear who you think is important.

Rosa Parks Birthday Remembered

Editor, The Rotunda:

February 4th marks the 80th birthday of Rosa Parks, "first lady of human rights". On December 1, 1955 she refused to give her seat on the bus to a white man in Montgomery, Alabama and was arrested. This led to the rise of Ralph Abernathy and Martin Luther King and a host of others, both white and black, willing to suffer prison, beatings and even death to fulfill the American dream.

On February 4th the "bus of her dreams" will again open its door to all who want to follow her example of determination. Although she had a brilliant mind she sacrificed much of her early education to care for ailing family members and fatherless household. She worked long hours for little pay as a seamstress, but found time to be active in church and the local NAACP. Martin Luther King called her the "great fuse that led to freedom." The honors she has received would "fill a book".

Of her kind her friend Jesus said in Matthew 5:10, "Blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Harvey Lester Sperry

PS. She took up the mantle of Harriet Tubman, the Great Liberator, who died just a month after the birth of Rosa.

Where are all of the professors?

By Carol Semones
Staff Writer

How often have students telephoned a professor or other faculty member to set up an appointment or ask a few simple questions and encountered a full answering service, no answering service at all, a student assistant with no clue, or a secretary who seems to be screening calls?

College students can generally categorized into two categories- those who "go with the flow" and those who need to ask questions and understand everything completely.

These hard-nosed types often turn to professors and faculty members as sources of information. Believe it or not, the Student Handbook is not always handy enough.

Often, students can easily contact the professors of the courses they are currently taking due to interaction on a regular basis.

However, not having a syllabus as a source for office hours, attempting to get in touch with a faculty member can get frustrating.

In many cases, secretaries juggle students around from department to department until they have either forgotten their question or given up.

This type of treatment can transform a "go-get-em" student into a "well, what's the use?" student in a matter of minutes.

Do Longwood faculty members really want students who do not care and do not want to know? What is going to happen to the old college try?

When asked about the problem of getting in touch with faculty, a sophomore said that some faculty members whom she has encountered did not seem interested in what she was asking.

Not only are professors often inaccessible by phone or uninterested, they often cannot be found in their offices.

Junior Linda Walker said, "they state certain office hours in their syllabi but are not there when your visit during those hours. It is a real big inconvenience for us."

Students do not have time during the day to call from department to department or dash from office to office. When a student takes time away from course work to call a professor and leave a message, the professor should take time away from their work load to return the call as soon as possible.

Unless an emergency arises, professors and other faculty members should make it a habit to be in their offices during their established office hours.

When did students become nuisances rather than inspirations to teachers and professors? Aren't students what a college is all about?

OPINION

Scott Joyce helps put our priorities straight

By Erin C. McCay
Editor-in-Chief

Three cheers for Scott Joyce! This student, who has been a shining star of many of Longwood's recent theatrical productions (including his absolutely stellar performance in last year's "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum"), has shown that he is not just a talented thespian.

With his recent involvement (especially financial) in the production of "Fugue in a Nursery," Joyce has demonstrated his willingness to take a chance and make a statement - personality traits sorely lacking in a majority of the members of the student body of Longwood College.

Sure, the play is controversial - as the recent debates raging over gays in the military have proved, anything concerning the issue of homosexuality usually is. Sure, a lot of people are probably upset that a "nice little college" like Longwood would have such a production produced in its theater. Sure, it will "bother some."

But I sincerely hope that a majority of the student body, faculty, staff, and administrators will wholeheartedly support Joyce in his efforts For far too long only "socially acceptable" relationships have been the fodder for mainstream entertainment, and it saddens me that Joyce must make a point of clarifying that this is not a "gay play."

As reported in some statistics, ten percent, if not more, of the general population is gay, lesbian, or bisexual. And I'd bet my money one the "or more" part of the previous statement.

Longwood has long espoused the cause of diversity, but its feeble attempts at promoting this noble idea has been mainly in the area of racial diversity - with almost no attention focused on sexual diversity.

The only group who has brought awareness to this issue has been Unity, a secret organization of gay, lesbian, and bisexual students from Longwood and Hampden-Sydney.

And why are the members of this group anonymous?

Because they probably fear (rightly so) that their lives would probably become a living hell here at this "nice little college." They would most likely become victims of discrimination, verbal abuse, and actual physical harm.

I don't know whether or not Scott Joyce chose "Fugue" to raise awareness, or simply because it is an incredibly well-written play (which it is).

Regardless of his intentions, he has challenged many of us to re-evaluate our environment by pointing out that not all relationships are monogamous, male-female, soon-we'll-get-married type relationships.

There are a number of options which an individual may not choose to exercise, but which should be accorded an equal amount of respect.

So, again, hooray for Scott Joyce's incredible amount of initiative and chutzpah. And I hope that students will not have to question the role of SGA as truly representative of all students-I urge them to reimburse Scott Joyce and, unlike some college administrators, show their support for true diversity.

A DISPATCH FROM SPY MAGAZINE

Come to Planet Hollywood Often?

Julie Christie, Diane Sawyer, Madonna. Susan was no different. I approached. I spoke. Mine. Like a deer caught in the headlights. All because I possessed five words purloined from Warren Beatty.

I was at a bar on upper Amsterdam Avenue—New York's version of Fraternity Row. For four hours, I alternately downed drinks and delivered famous people's pickup lines. I should've known Beatty's would be the clear winner.

A tall brunet with extremely red lipstick, Susan wore a sleeveless denim shirt and black jeans. She drank beer from the bottle. After I said Beatty's magic words, "Make a pass at me," she looked at me in silence, then said, "I've been looking for someone strong enough to flip my mattress for me." She asked for my number. (Post-line conversation time: 25 minutes.)

Other lines achieved various degrees of success. John Stamos's plow horse, "Got a cigarette?," was received warmly. Claire, a blond, gave me a Camel but ended the conversation shortly after she learned that I did not work on Wall Street. (Post-line conversation time: 2 minutes, 20 seconds.)

Tommy Smothers's "It's my birthday. Kiss me" was like shooting fish in a barrel. Lisa kissed me on the lips, then brought over five friends, all of whom did likewise. Then they bought me a birthday shot of Jack Daniel's. (Post-line conversation time: 35 minutes.) Jackie Mason also has a winner in "You are a very sexually attractive young woman, and I would like to get to know you better." Anna, a martini-drinking bobbed blond, kissed me on the cheek and asked, "How much would you like to know?" (Post-line conversation time: 17 minutes.)

Then there were some problems. When I deployed Peter Gallagher's "I like to wear rubber underwear," Marie's jaw dropped, and she said, "You're a pervert, asshole," before walking away. (Post-line conversation time: 0 minutes.) Then there was Karen, a large-toothed brunet with a propensity for writhing to the music while standing at the bar. When I tried out Schwarzenegger's major salvo, "Your bangability is very high tonight, baby," she slapped me hard. Maybe it was the accent.

Shopping options found in Farmville

Wal Mart and Roses are the great shopping Meccas of Farmville. However, if one is look a little deeper, he or she will find various boutiques and shops in the Farmville area that offer a touch of style and culture.

T.G.I.F., a unisex clothing outlet, is perhaps the best store for college students. It offers a wide range of clothing, ranging from the norm to the unique.

For boxer fanatics, they have some pretty interesting designs and patterns. Prices can be a little high, yet not inaccessible.

Cato is a women's clothing store whose stock is similar to that of T.G.I.F. However, their prices can be more expensive.

They do have an extensive selection on accessories, hats, and very attractive dresses that would be great to wear in the office. The best time to shop at Cato is when they are having a sale.

Baldwins is also a unisex store, but their clothing is expensive. Another thing to consider is that most of their clothing is not really geared for the college generation. Yet, they do keep some items in stock that do appeal to young adults.

For those who like jewelry, Martin's Jeweler has some very good deals. Not only do they sell jewelry and watches, but also knickknacks, dishes, and crystal ware.

Another great aspect of Martin's is that they repair jewelry at a reasonable rate and do free engraving on items such as I.D. bracelets (one must purchase the item there, though.).

A nice little shop that sells crafts and gift items is Country Heart. The store seems to specialize in the little necessities that make houses or even dorm rooms a little homier.

They sell candles, greeting cards, throw rugs/rag rugs, picture frames, and perhaps best of all, homemade fudge.

Of all the major food stores, perhaps Cheese & Co. is a the best shop to find diversity and a touch of culture.

Not only do they sell food and coffee items, but also craft goods that are reminiscent of handmade goods that one always finds in either the attic or the cellar.

Their food ranges from the English Walker's Shortbread to the German Hit Cookies. The coffee selection is also excellent in that they sell a wide selection with tastes such as "French Roast" or "Chocolate Macadamia Nut."

The restaurant portion of Cheese & Co. is one of the best kept secrets of Farmville, offering delicious and innovative deli sandwiches utilizing unusual ingredients to make it a dining sensation.

For people who have a sweet tooth but miss Mom's home-cooking, take a look at Terry's Bakery. The prices are decent and the chocolate eclairs are wonderful.

If anyone is looking for a bargain, yet they don't know what they want until they see it, Motley's Emporium is the place to go. They have everything there that someone could want. From armchairs to desks to toys to windchimes, Motley's has the used version of everything under the sun.

Although this store can not be found in Farmville itself, anyone going on a road trip through Rice who loves books must take a look at the Good Ol' Girl bookstore. This bookstore sells both new and used books at very good prices.

Wal Mart and Roses do have a lot to offer to college students, especially when they are searching for bargain prices. However, if one is looking for something a little more special or seeking to perhaps broaden their horizons, there are other alternatives to these massive pseudo malls.

The secondary shops and outlets do offer a unique variety of both the styles of homey Southern Virginia or the slight mystique of International Europe.

Hillary Clinton a fashion-plate, too

WASHINGTON (AP) Hillary Clinton may be planning to carve out a new policy-making role as first lady, but her press office is hardly ignoring her fashion-page appeal this week.

In a release Monday, her office noted that her outfit for the day was a "slim silhouette, chocolate brown knit dress by St. John with double breasted gold and tortoise buttons," complimented by a St. John scarf with a Mark Cross print.

Her full-length coat designed by Connie Fails "is done in black cashmere with gold and silver applique on the back and on the cuffs."

The coat, which she also wore Sunday on the bus trip to Washington and musical program at the Lincoln Memorial, was part of her ensemble on her solo visit to the capital's Mall.

During the evening, Mrs. Clinton accompanied her husband to four inaugural dinners. She wore a long, two-piece black suit by Helen Benton, with a gold lace-embroidered jacket. Her blonde hair swept up, she clutched a jewelled handbag that looked remarkably like Socks the family cat.

Her coat for the evening: another Connie Fails creation in olive green moire with a portrait collar of black faux fur and pleated back, "creating a fan effect from the shoulder to the floor helping to enhance the elegance of the train embellished with numerous appliques."

ROTC plans busy Spring

By Mark Tueting

Longwood College's Reserve Officer Training Corp's (ROTC) cadets have already begun their activities for this semester. On January 28, cadets traveled to Wintergreen, Virginia, for an evening of night skiing, and on the 30th they conducted training activities in Land Navigation. With the aid of Military Science instructors, as well as experienced students, cadets learned to use a compass and map to accurately guide themselves.

Cadets will have the opportunity to fire live rounds at the Fort A.P. Hill small arms range on February 13. After taking classes in basic rifle marksmanship, students will enjoy hands-on experience with the M-16 assault rifle.

On February 19, juniors, seniors, and some selected underclassmen of the program will travel to the Fort Lee's Officer Club for an evening of socializing with their counterparts from the University of Richmond and Virginia Commonwealth University at the Military Ball.

Later in the month of February, ROTC cadets will be training at Fort Pickett. The focus of this day will be on the underclassmen: letting them experience some aspects of military life, ask questions about the army, all while enjoying themselves in a challenging environment.

Rappelling will be the focus of training on the 20th of March. Using stout ropes to control their descent, cadets will jump from forty-foot towers and bound to the ground. Cadets who learn rappelling techniques during this exercise will be certified to rappel from a helicopter. Students will have an opportunity to observe this on April 8th, at Ilet Field.

Hillary Rodham Clinton named to head health care task force

WASHINGTON (AP) President Clinton named his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, to head a national health care task force today, promising that his team "would work day and night" to solve one of the nation's key domestic problems.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, who is a longtime advocate for children and families, served on the board of Arkansas Children's Hospital in Little Rock, Ark.

An education task force Mrs. Clinton chaired in 1983 was credited with building a consensus on reforms that became the cornerstone of Clinton's tenure as governor.

Clinton has said that Americans will soon learn "that we have a first lady of many talents."

Mrs. Clinton will not draw a salary for her work.

"I never have paid her for her public service. I don't want to start now," he said.

Clinton said he chose his wife to chair the President's Task Force on National Health Reform because "she's better at organizing and leading people from a complex beginning to a certain end" than anybody he has ever known.

"I also figured if I did that you'd know I meant it," Clinton told reporters at the end of an hour-long meeting with his health advisers, including several members of his Cabinet.

He instructed the task force to complete a legislative package to send Congress in 100 days, as he promised during the campaign. That would be around May 1.

Clinton said the taskforce would work out of a "war room" in the Old Executive Office Building.

"We're going to work constantly, day and night, until we have a health care program ... that we believe can pass," the president said.

He said the task force would tackle such diverse problems as providing health care in inner cities, dealing with the AIDS crisis, coping veterans' health problems and other unmet needs of America's $840 billion health system, easily the world's costliest.

"It's time to make sense of America's health care system," said President Clinton, standing in the Roosevelt Room of the hite House with his wife and other health advisers seated beside him.

"I want it done now," said Clinton, who promised last year to formulate a health overhaul in his first 100 days in the White House.

"We're going to have to make some tough choices," to bring costs under control and provide coverage for all, he said.

Some 35 million Americans now lack any health insurance, and at least 20 million others have inadequate insurance coverage.

"Powerful lobbies of special interests may seek to derail our efforts, and we may make some people angry, but we are determined to come up with the best possible solution," he said.

The health care task force headed by Mrs. Clinton also includes Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala , as well as the secretaries of the Treasury, Commerce, Defense and Veterans Affairs and Labor, as well as the head of the Office of Management and Budget and senior White House aides.

President Clinton said that his wife will work at the White House with Ira Magaziner, his senior policy adviser; Judy Feder, who headed his health care transition team; and Carol Rasco, assistant to the president for domestic policy.

Learning suffers in larger universities

Peers, institution-size have greatest effect on learning

SEATTLE (AP) Friends outdo professors in encouraging student achievement and learning tends to suffer the bigger a university gets and the more it focuses on research, a study indicates.

Students provide each other with the most critical stimulus in learning and personal development, said Alexander Astin, director of the Higher Education Research Institute at the University of California at Los Angeles and author of "What Matters in College: Four Critical Years Revisited."

His latest findings, based on a five-year study of 25,000 undergraduates at 217 colleges nationwide, were discussed Thursday before about 1,000 people in an Association of American Colleges symposium.

Student involvement in learning is the biggest single factor in higher education, Astin said.

"Faculty debates about whether to include this or that course in the curriculum seem like fiddling while Rome burns," he said.

Students are critical in shaping each other's values and attitudes, and friends in the same class may discuss lectures and reading assignments, he said.

"The quantity and quality of contact with peers seems to make the biggest difference for students," Astin said in an interview.

"Students don't interact as much with each other in a large institution," he said.

Astin said his $800,000 study indicated that faculty members at large, research-oriented institutions spend too much time on administrative and personnel work, often in committees that produce little of value.

Instructors also tend to be paid more according to how much they publish rather than how well they teach, he said.

Of the schools included in the study, large public universities tended to do well in research but poorly in teaching undergraduates, smaller private schools were strong in teaching but weak in research, some four-year state schools were weak in both areas and about eight schools were strong in both areas, he said.

Astin said he was unable to identify almost any of the schools in the last two categories because he had only just finished his statistical analysis, but he cited The Evergreen State College in Olympia as an unusual example of a four-year state school with superior teaching.

He visited the school last spring to make an in-depth case study.

"I think what he was saying (in his findings) was putting in words whale we do at Evergreen," Evergreen provost Russell Lidman said.

Clinton, and Yeltsin to meet

MOSCOW (AP) President Boris Yeltsin and President Clinton agreed by telephone Saturday to have their top diplomats meet to plan a summit, Yeltsin's office said.

U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher and Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev will meet "to prepare a summit" in a third country in the "nearest future," the Russian leader's office said in a statement. It did not identify the third country.

In Washington, White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers said the place or time for a summit was not decided during the 30-minute talk. She said that a timetable for the Christopher-Kozyrev meeting had also not been set.

Clinton assured Yeltsin that his administration would support Russia's democratic reforms, Yeltsin's office and the White House both said.

Violence against women increase Super Bowl Sunday

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) The beer, the bonding and the betting can take an ugly turn from good feeling into battering of women on Super Bowl Sunday, a coalition of activists warned.

Some women's shelters report as much as a 40 percent increase in calls for help on Super Bowl Sunday and the following Monday, Linda Mitchell of Fairness & Accuracy in Reporting, a media watchdog group.

Mitchell and others spoke Thursday at a news conference at the Rose Bowl, site of Sunday's game between the Buffalo Bills and Dallas Cowboys.

"There is significant anecdotal evidence that Super Bowl Sunday is the biggest day of the year for domestic violence against women," said Sheila Kuehl, managing lawyer of the California Women's Law Center.

"This game is terrifying for far too many women and that has to stop."

Mitchell called on the media to use its resources to bring about change in society's attitude toward domestic abuse, which she claimed is the leading cause of injury to women nationwide.

"Domestic violence is one of the major issues in this country and it needs attention from the media," Mitchell said. "It's been ignored too long."

"The betting, the bonding and the beer for the men can turn into beating for women," said Patricia Occiuzzo Giggans of the Los Angeles Commission on Assaults Against Women.

Mitchell said women's groups persuaded NBC-TV to air a public service announcement against domestic violence during Sunday's broadcast.

Curt Block, vice president of media relations for NBC, said the network planned to broadcast the PSA during its pregame show. He said it would air at about 4 p.m. EST.

The PSA shows a man talking from a jail cell. "We were just having an argument. I guess I lost my temper. I didn't mean to hurt her," the man says. "I didn't know you could go to jail for hitting your wife."

A toll-free telephone number to report abuse or get help is shown.

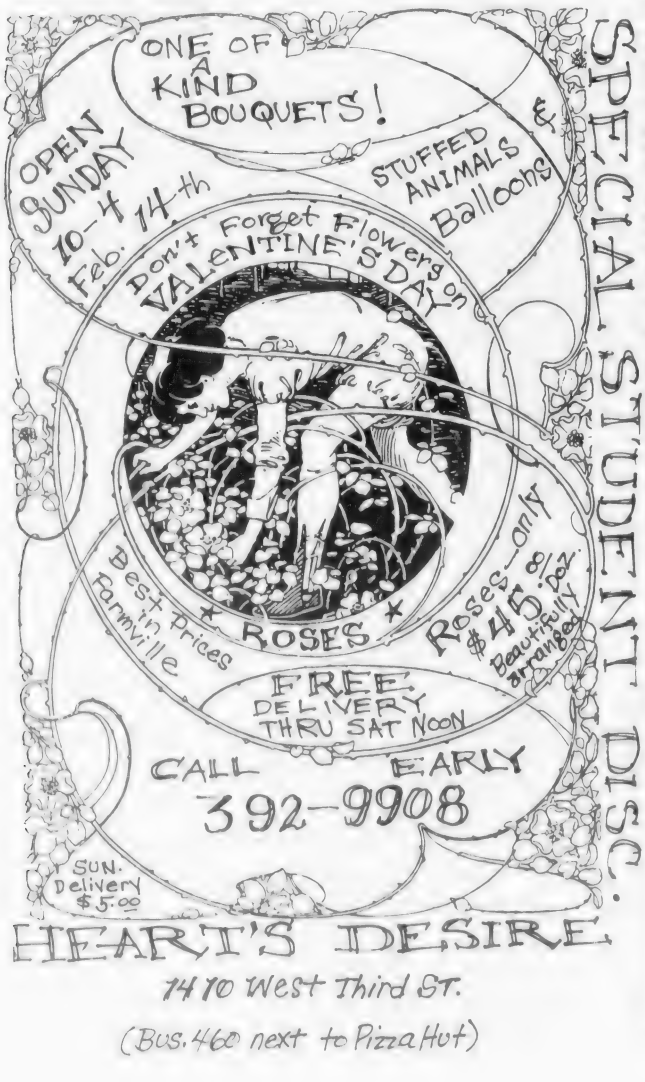
The network stands to lose as much as $850,000 in advertising revenue by running the free, half-minute spot, Block said.

"We air PSAs throughout our schedule on a variety of issues," he said by telephone from New York. "We think this is a very important issue for a very significant day."

Kuehl said the study by sociologists at Old Dominion University in Norfolk, Va., found that men are more likely to batter their partners after their favorite team wins.

The study found that police reports of beatings and hospital admissions in northern Virginia rose 40 percent after games won by the Washington Redskins during the 1988-89 season, she said.

"They see violence rewarded on television, and some of them react as though that's an appropriate way to behave," she said.



"The Super Bowl is significant because it draws attention to the fact that there is a cycle of violence in many relationships and that cycle has trigger points," Occiuzzo Giggans said.

The Los Angeles Police Department has reported an increase in felony domestic violence arrests during the past two Super Bowls.

The daily average of such arrests in the city is 20, but during last year's game there were 34 and in 1991 there were 27. Arrests on the Mondays following the game were slightly higher than the average.

Alcohol plays a role in Super Bowl Day beatings, Kuehl said.

"But it's not causal, it's an enabler," she said. "It breaks down inhibitions. But it's not an excuse for hitting anyone."

Marshall was life-time civil rights champion

WASHINGTON (AP) Thurgood Marshall, a "true American hero" who served 24 years as the Supreme Court's first black justice and a lifetime as a civil rights champion was remembered for his sense of humor and warmth.

"The members of this court will miss Justice Marshall's wit, warmth and charm," Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist said as the court took the bench to release decisions.

"I speak for them in expressing our profound sympathy to ... the Marshall family and all those whose lives were touched by this extraordinary man," Rehnquist told a hushed courtroom audience.

Rehnquist said a special courtroom service for Marshall would be held at some future date.

Marshall, who retired from the high court 18 months ago because of his age and poor health, died Sunday, January 24th of heart failure at Bethesda Naval Hospital in the Washington suburbs. He was 84.

The great-grandson of a slave, Marshall was privately gregarious and genial, more reserved in public.

But he cracked up the news conference where he announced his retirement, telling a reporter: "What's wrong with me? I'm old. I'm getting old and coming apart."

As a justice, he opposed the death penalty, and was a forceful advocate of abortion rights, affirmative action and legal protections for criminal defendants.

As a member of the court's shrinking liberal wing, Marshall often had vowed to outlive Republican presidents so his replacement could be chosen by a Democrat. It was a promise he could not keep.

After Marshall retired, Republican George Bush named conservative Clarence Thomas to the court, prompting a stormy confirmation fight featuring sordid allegations of sexual harassment.

"We've lost a true American hero," Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor said. "He left behind a legacy of hope for racial equality."

President Clinton issued a statement saying he was "deeply saddened" by Marshall's death.

"He was a giant in the quest for human rights and equal opportunity in the whole history of our country," Clinton said.

"Every American should be grateful for the contributions he made as an advocate and as a justice."

In a proclamation issued by the President, Clinton ordered all flags flown at half-staff at federal facilities until Marshall's funeral.

The proclamation says Marshall "was a fundamental force of change in this nation."

Retired Justice William J. Brennan, Marshall's closest friend on the Supreme Court, said his "commitment to making the Constitution a vehicle to protect the equal rights of all has no match in American history."

Marshall was to have sworn in Al Gore as vice president, but his health prevented it. The duty went to Justice Byron R. White.

Marshall was hospitalized the day after the Clinton-Gore inauguration.

Marshall's 1967 appointment by President Lyndon B. Johnson culminated a successful career as a civil rights attorney, appeals court judge and U.S. solicitor general, the government's top courtroom lawyer.

His most famous case as a lawyer was the landmark Brown vs. Board of Education desegregation case in which he represented the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The Supreme Court used the case in 1954 to outlaw racial segregation in public education.

"His victories went beyond those pertaining to race," said A. Leon Higginbotham, chief judge emeritus of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit. "For if he had not won the Brown case, the door of equal opportunity would have been more tightly closed also to women, other minorities and the poor."

Among some of the more important decisions written by Marshall for the high court were those saying that shopping center owners' power to restrict demonstrations were limited; that a teacher cannot be fired for speaking out truthfully on public issues; that possessing obscene material within the privacy of one's own home cannot be made a crime.

As the court grew more conservative under Republican presidents, Marshall wrote more and more dissenting opinions.

In 1974 he strongly dissented from a ruling invalidating a plan for busing pupils across school district lines to achieve racial integration, calling it a "giant step backward" from the 1954 Brown decision.

In 1972, Marshall was one of two justices who said the death penalty was unconstitutional under any circumstances, in a 5-4 decision which struck down capital punishment laws then on the books.

The court reinstated capital punishment in 1976 and Marshall often spoke in opposition, telling a New York audience in 1984 that blacks were more at risk of execution in racially charged murder cases than were whites.

Marshall was born July 2, 1908, in Baltimore, the son of William and Norma Marshall. He grew up in comfortable but not affluent circumstances. His father was a headwaiter in private clubs. His mother was a schoolteac. er.

He graduated at the top of his law school class in 1933 at Howard University after his mother sold her engagement ring to help pay his tuition.

He could not attend the University of Maryland's law school in his hometown. It was for whites only.

Marshall is survived by his wife, Cecilia, and two sons, John William and Thurgood Jr.

Return on college diploma $242 a week

WASHINGTON (AP) The one in four Americans who had a college degree in 1990 earned an average $242 per week more than those who didn't, the Census Bureau says.

But that advantage was hardly immediate. For many new graduates, the expense of tuition, the hours of study and the steady accumulation of debt often is met with a starting job at a low salary - often one that didn't require a degree.

Is college worth it?

"Some of my friends at home didn't go to college. ... They're already pretty well established and are making almost the same amount," said Jennifer Hager of Allentown, Pa., a sophomore at Notre Dame. "When you come out of college, you're in a lot of debt already."

But a Census Bureau study, released Wednesday, said people with bachelor's degrees in 1990 averaged $2,116 a month in earnings. High-school graduates earned $1,077 a month.

Tuition, books, room and board for four years at a public university averaged $19,880 in 1990, according to a separate survey by the College Board.

Prestigious private universities, meanwhile, cost up to four times that amount.

It takes the typical four-year graduate of a public university just a little under two years to make up his or her college costs, but that doesn't count the pay and experience that otherwise would have been earned working rather than studying, the figures show.

Engineers and computer programmers can expect jobs in their specialties when they graduate, said Susan Miller, president of an Annandale, Va., job placement firm.

"But the liberal arts graduates are thrown out there in the job market competing with the high-school grads," for jobs as receptionists and other entry positions, she said.

Miller said it's only later that college graduates gain an edge on their colleagues who stopped with high school.

"Where it pays off for them is they get the promotions," she said.

College seniors approach graduation with sense of pessimism.

"I'll go out and try to get the highest paying job I can," said Jonathon Seigle of Tustin, Calif., a student at Yale, where tuition is $23,700 a year. "Going to college helps, but it doesn't guarantee anything. Even the big name doesn't help you too much. A lot of seniors are finding that now."

For some students, it's the intangible benefits of college that count.

"I don't know if I'm going to school just to make a lot of money," said Stephanie Haus of Lenox, Mass., a junior at Yale. "Education is an end to itself, not just a means to an end. The classes I've taken in philosophy, religious studies and art history justify for me the inordinate amount of money."

Some say case not clear cut enough

HBO date rape special sparks controversy

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) If Home Box Office wanted to promote family discussion of date rape, it should have chosen a story less controversial than that of College of William and Mary student Katie Koestner, some students at the school say.

"There's got to be a case that is more clear cut," said Jay Hughes, co-chairman of the school's Judicial Council, which deals with cases involving student complaints of sexual assault.

Hughes and a group of other students watched a videotaped preview of the HBO program Tuesday. The date-rape segment first aired Tuesday night and will be broadcast five more times this month.

"I just think it slights a serious issue," said senior Keith Gagnon. "I think it's important to know about it, but they picked a bad case. It just causes more confusion."

The half-hour program, called "No Visible Bruises: The Katie Koestner Story," aired on the cable channel as part of a six-part series, "Life Stories: Families in Crisis."

After going public with her story alleging she was raped by a fellow student, Miss Kaestner has received considerable national publicity.

Some William and Mary students believe the attention has hurt her.

"I don't think she has a lot of credibility," Gagnon said. "I think it's a shame that a serious issue can be brought down by all this publicity."

But a graduate of the college said the important issue is whether the program accurately portrays the problems campus rape victims confront when they press charges.

"Instead of saying we do or don't believe her, we ought to look at the whole issue what does it mean to be going too far with someone," said Jennifer Hughes, who said a good friend was raped by a date at another school.

Miss Kaestner, a junior, has said she expects a new round of controversy on the campus as a result of the HBO program.

"I'm hoping people will see that what he did was not right, and that it really was rape," she said.

Last spring, 1,200 students signed petitions circulated by the girlfriend of Miss Kaestner's alleged attacker urging HBO to include his side of the story in its production.

The HBO series is intended to help families talk about issues that might not typically come up in dinner-table conversation, a spokeswoman for the cable channel said.

Severed limb found

LOS ANGELES (AP) A severed leg found this weekend belongs to a man who lost it in a motorcycle accident in December, authorities said.

Roman Diaz, 28, of South Gate told authorities Tuesday that a leg found in the back yard of a Willowbrook house on Sunday was his, sheriff's Sgt. Bob Stoneman said.

Diaz' leg was severed Dec. 12 about eight miles south of downtown when a car turned in front of his motorcycle catching his leg on the bumper.

"The car stopped briefly, but then took off," California Highway Patrol Officer Todd Sturges said. "It's just bizarre that (the leg) showed up so long after the accident."

The driver of the car apparently drove about two miles south to unincorporated Willowbrook, removed the limb from his bumper, wrapped it in plastic and left it behind the vacant house, Sturges said.

One of Diaz's relatives heard a news report about the mystery leg and notified authorities that it might belong to Diaz, officials said.

Diaz produced a shoe that matched the shoe on the severed leg, Sturges said.

The driver of the car has not been located, Sturges said.

Burglar snoozes in stolen car

GLENDALE, Calif. (AP) Hint to burglars: Don't sleep on the job.

Daniel Marcos Sanchez, 26 of Los Angeles was booked for investigation of car burglary on Wednesday after he was found fast asleep in a car inside someone else's garage, police said.

Alice Saginian said her husband, Vahe, went into the garage in the Los Angeles suburb shortly before 6 a.m. Wednesday and saw two feet sticking out the open driver's door of his Honda.

"He came running up here. We thought either someone had been killed or a homeless man needed a place to sleep," she said Thursday.

"He was sleeping on my pillow I always leave in the car. Next time, I will leave a blanket."

The man slept so soundly that he didn't even hear police approach the car and order him not to move, Sgt. Lief Nicolaisen said.

Tools believed used to open the car were found with the man, he said.

"This is the first time we have seen anybody fall asleep during the commission of a crime," Nicolaisen said. "We'd like to see more of these auto burglars fall asleep. It might help us clear a few more cases."

400 mile odyssey began with wrong turn

BOWLING GREEN, Ky. (AP) A wrong turn on a two-mile drive to a Cicero, Ill., nursing home turned into a 400-mile odyssey during the weekend for an 89-year-old driver, police said.

A Warren County sheriff's deputy found Frank Greene parked along a street on the north side of Bowling Green late Saturday. After discovering that Greene had been reported missing, police took him to a motel and telephoned a relative.

Greene told police he apparently made a wrong turn driving the two miles from his house to a nursing home to visit his wife.

"It appeared as if (Greene) had driven the car a long way with the right rear tire being flat," a Bowling Green police report said.

The report also said that Greene's 1986 car had damage to the front passenger side and driver side, and the right rear wheel was destroyed.

A motel employee said Greene alternated between being alert and seeming disoriented when he arrived at the motel.

Greene did not require medical help, although police said he "seemed very disoriented and had no idea that he was in Kentucky."

CLINTON PLANNING ABC SPECIAL WITH KIDS

WASHINGTON (AP) The Clinton administration is close to an agreement with ABC News to have the president take part in a special children's show at the White House, administration officials said Monday.

Clinton would take questions from the audience at the White House, and perhaps, via satellite hookup, from similar gatherings at other locations, said another official.

Peter Jennings is expected to anchor the show, likely to be scheduled on a Saturday morning in early February, the officials said.

FORMER SECRETARY OF STATE APPOINTED TO UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA POST

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) Former Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger has been appointed to a faculty position at the University of Virginia, school officials said today.

Eagleburger, who left office Wednesday with the Bush administration, will work part-time with the school's White Burkett Miller Center of Public Affairs. The center studies the United States presidency and governance issues.

HILLARY CLINTON DELIGHTS SPECIAL EDUCATION STUDENTS

(AP) Hillary Rodham Clinton delighted a group of special education students with a visit to their exhibit of crafts at the inaugural festival on the Mall.

The students with various disabilities are part of a vocational education program in Flossmoor, Ill., which trains them in entrepreneurial skills.

Among the items they craft for sale are American flag boutonnieres featuring three tiny, red, white and blue roses made of entwined ribbon, which they presented to Mrs. Clinton along with a red school jacket and a flower arrangement featuring a toy saxophone.

Mrs. Clinton's visit to the Homewood-Flossmoor booth was part of a 20-minute afternoon stop without the president at the inaugural's outdoor festival, dubbed "America's Reunion on the Mall."

STORIES FROM YUPIK ELDERS COMPILED IN NEW BOOK

BETHEL (AP) The oral tradition of a remote western Alaska village is being brought to the printed page in an upcoming book being published by the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

A collection of stories and legends from the Nelson Island village of Tununak, about 120 miles west of Bethel, will be published in both Yupik and English by the university's Alaska Native Language Center.

The 260-page book, tentatively titled "Tunnemiut qanemcit qulrarit-llu," or "Stories and Legends from Tununak," would become one of the largest literary works ever published in Yupik.

Central Yupik is the second most spoken Native language in the United States, surpassed by only Navajo. But the first book written entirely in the language, besides the New Testament, wasn't published until 1985.

Most of the material was gathered by taping about 50 storytelling performances by elders at the village school. The tapes were then transcribed in Yupik and translated into English.

Ride board helps move students

By Mindy Oakes
Rotunda Staff

Are you a student stuck in Farmville without a car but with places to go? Something all car-less students need to check out is located in the Student Union. It's called the Ride Board.

The Ride Board is a resource to those who need to leave Farmville for a weekend. One can usually find someone heading in their direction, or if not, at least somewhere close to their destination.

The system is easy. Students needing a ride make a sign stating where they need to go, when they can leave, their name and number, and if they are willing to help with gas money.

Those who are planning to leave town and who desire company or someone to share expenses check the board every so often to find a person who needs a ride. He or she gets a name and phone number from the board and contacts any interested parties.

The Ride Board is a resource provided by the Commuter Student Association and the Office of Student Development.

Don Shula reviews Super Bowl

It was hard to imagine that a team could do to Buffalo what Dallas did today. That really was a beating. It was a tremendous display of strength and ability and perfection by the Cowboys.

You can say the Bills had the turnovers and that it really cost them the game, but it was Dallas that caused them. They put on relentless pressure and Buffalo could not handle it.

The no-huddle offense was one of the things I thought would be in Buffalo's favor. I didn't know how Dallas' defense would do against it.

But the Bills never got a chance to run it. My point is that it's tough to run the no-huddle when you give up the football. They just never got a chance to get it going early, and when they did later, it was too late.

We've beaten Buffalo twice in the last three years, and both times they made mistakes. When they're playing well and not making mistakes, they're tough to beat, but that wasn't the case today.

You can't say enough about what Dave Wannstedt did as the defensive coordinator for Dallas. They're the No. 1 defense in the league, and you saw why.

Troy Aikman was unbelievable. Did you see him on that 22-yard scramble? He's an exceptional athlete - he wasn't content to get out of the pocket, he wanted to get upfield and he did.

Emmitt Smith did the things that made him the NFL's top rusher. He's strong and fast and can catch the ball. He presented a lot of problems.

The Dallas offensive line took Bruce Smith and Cornelius Bennett out of the game. They're great players, and they were not a factor. The Cowboys did it by mixing the run and the pass. And even when they do pass, they don't take much time doing it.

A lot was said before the game about how young the Cowboys were and how they'd never been to a Super Bowl and how they would handle everything. I think the thing that had to be the most meaningful for them this season was the second half of the NFC championship game at San Francisco.

That game was tied at halftime, and the Cowboys took control against a very good team. That had to give them the confidence that they could do what they did today.

The one time the Bills made it close, the Cowboys did the same thing they did against the 49ers. After Buffalo got within 31-17, the Cowboys came back and scored right away. That's what they did in San Francisco, when they got the big play to Alvin Harper and went on to score the clinching touchdown.

Some people might say a turning point was early in the game, when Buffalo had fourth-and-goal inside the 1 and went for it. You can always second guess, but today it didn't matter. I'm sure Marv Levy felt like they were going to score and, in a big game like that, I might have felt the same way.

You really have to feel for Marv and Bills. They've played so many good games in the last three years, but a lot of people are just going to remember that they lost three straight Super Bowls. Marv has done such a good job, especially the way he brought them back in that playoff game against Houston.

You really have to admire what Jimmy Johnson and Jerry Jones and the Cowboys have done. The Dallas Cowboys were a great organization, then they had some down years. Jimmy was able to come in there and get things going again.

To me, the Herschel Walker trade was what turned them around.

Tom Landry and Tex Schramm were the ones who worked out the trade to draft Herschel, and he was a star for them. Jimmy engineered the trade that got all of those players and draft picks for Herschel.

I got to know Jimmy a little when he coached at the University of Miami. I know he's very intense. A lot of successful college coaches have been reluctant to go to the NFL or have gone and not always done too well, but he has.

A coach has to be able to evaluate talent, motivate that talent and have a strategy. Those are all strengths that Jimmy has.

It certainly all came together for them today. They showed they're strong in all areas. And because they're the youngest team in the NFL, it means that all of us are going to be seeing a lot more of them in the future.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Don Shula has coached in a record six Super Bowls. He is the second-winningest coach in NFL history, going 317-151-6 with Miami and Baltimore. He guided the Dolphins into the AFC championship game this season, where they lost to Buffalo 29-10.

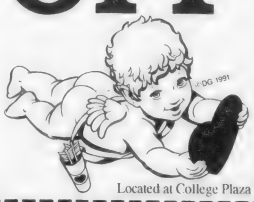
Freshman records two double doubles

Owens named player of the week

Freshman women's basketball forward Charity Owens, who recorded two double-doubles and established new career-highs for points and rebounds last week, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period of Jan. 24-31. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

Owens recorded 37 rebounds and 36 points in three games last week. She scored a career-high 15 points in a 79-56 loss at Queens (N.C.) College Saturday afternoon, grabbing 14 rebounds with five steals, two assists and a blocked shot as well. In a 57-48 loss to Elon last Wednesday, Owens grabbed a career-high 17 rebounds along with 12 points, two blocked shots, two steals and an assist. Owens had nine points, six boards, three blocks, three assists and two steals at Pfeiffer last Monday, a 100-80 loss.

"Charity is really playing well for us," commented coach Shirley Duncan. "She plays with tremendous desire and has an instinct for the ball."



Owens finished the week 13-29 shooting from the floor (45 percent), and 10-16 from the free throw line (63 percent). Through 17 games, Owens is averaging 6.6 ppg. and a team-high 9.0 rpg., with a team-leading 15 blocked shots. Owens is also third on the team with 32 steals and fourth in assists with 27.

A psychology and special education major, Owens is a graduate of Loudoun Valley High School in Purcellville and her family resides in Hamilton.

Lancers stretch win streak to five

Cagers whip Mount Olive 75-60

Longwood used superior size and an effective fast break to pull away from a quicker, but shorter Mount Olive team Monday night in a men's college basketball game in Lancer Hall. The Lancers, up 41-27 at halftime, led 57-37 with 12:04 left and ended up winning 75-60.

Now 13-7 with seven games still to play, the Lancers have now won five in a row and nine of their last 10. In addition to Monday's win over Mount Olive, the Lancers beat Elon last Wednesday at home 62-59.

After a 4-5 start in November and December, Longwood has gone 9-2 in the new year. Next up for the Lancers is a game at Wofford College in Spartanburg, S.C. Saturday night at 7:00. LC returns home to host West Virginia Wesleyan next Monday at 7:30.

Freshman Benji Webb and senior Bryan Weaver were the ringleaders of the Lancers' inside dominance. Webb had 16 points and 10 boards and Weaver 10 points with 12 rebounds. Webb and Weaver, assisted by Adam Huffman's seven rebounds and Michael Druitt's six, led Longwood to a 51-to-36 edge off the glass. Webb, Weaver, Huffman and Druitt combined for 35 boards. Webb added three blocked shots.

Druitt also scored 11 points (3-5 on three point field goals), with five assists and two steals. Junior Charles (Soup) Brown came alive in the second half with 11 points. Senior Chuck Laster added nine points while Huffman had seven points and two blocked shots.

Longwood survived an off night at the free throw line (6-16, 38 percent) by hitting 32 of 63 field goals (51 percent).

With Webb scoring seven points early, Longwood went up 16-7 with 14:41 left in the opening period. The Lancers, behind Weaver, J.B. Neill and Druitt used a 9-0 run to mount a 27-10 edge with 10:19 remaining. The Trojans, averaging more than 80 points per game coming in, never got closer than 10 the rest of the way.

The Lancers used a 12-0 surge to increase their lead to 53-31 with 15:33 left. Mount Olive made one final run to cut the deficit to 66-53 at the 7:09 mark. LC coach Ron Carr called a time-out and the Lancers settled down, ran off some clock and took back control of the contest.

Carr admitted he had some concerns about how his team would match up with the quicker Trojans.

"We did a decent job of containing them and matching up," said Carr. "It was not as difficult a game as I thought it would be. Druitt got us off to a good start as far as the transition game. He hit the open man and helped us get some easy baskets."

Carr also praised Weaver, Webb and Huffman for their play inside.

Junior guard Russell Stephens paced Mount Olive with 19 points. He added seven rebounds and five assists.

Lancers Top Elon 62-59

Longwood held visiting Elon to just two points over a stretch of nine minutes and 53 seconds in the second half and then salted the game away at the foul line, taking a 62-59 win over the Fightin' Christians Wednesday night in Lancer Hall.

The Lancers used tenacious man-to-man defense and accuracy at the free throw line to topple Elon. The Fightin' Christians had won an earlier meeting 70-66 Jan. 2 in Burlington, N.C., but managed just 22 points in the second half after a 37-37 halftime deadlock.

Sophomore Matt Watkins exploded for a trio of three-point bombs as the Lancers went on a decisive 15-2 run in the second half. The surge turned a 47-42 Elon lead at 12:53 into a 57-49 Longwood edge with 3:29 remaining.

Elon guard Jo Jo Stuart broke his team's drought with a bucket at the three-minute mark and made a free throw 12 seconds later to cut the deficit to 57-52 with 2:48 to go. The game took a strange turn at that point. The Fightin' Christians needed to send Longwood to the free throw line to stop the clock, but had just three team fouls.

With the score still 57-52 and 1:36 left, Elon began a series of four consecutive fouls. Each time a foul was called the shot clock reset to 45 seconds. By the time Elon was whistled for its seventh foul only 49 seconds remained. Matt Watkins stepped to the line for a one-and-one, but missed. Elon's Steve Walker scored seconds later to trim the deficit to 57-54 at 0:38.

Longwood's J.B. Neill, Michael Druitt and Bryan Weaver combined to hit five of six free throws in the final 35 seconds as the Lancers survived some anxious moments to hold on for the win. First Neill and then Weaver converted both ends of one-and-one chances. Then with 10 seconds left and the Lancers up 61-59 Druitt made the first of two foul shots. Elon's Len Silvia missed a 3-point attempt which would have forced overtime.

Longwood, making just 20 of 48 field goals for 41.7 percent, canned 18 of 25 from the free throw line, compared to Elon's 7 of 14 foul shots.

Benji Webb scored 12 of his 14 points in the first half to help Longwood battle from behind. He went 6-9 from the floor for the night. Weaver had 14 points and 10 boards for the Lancers and Watkins scored all nine of his points in the crucial second half surge.

Lancer coach Ron Carr credited Webb for his play in the first half, Watkins for picking the team up in the second and Weaver for his work on the boards.

Elon got 23 points from Cornelius Muller and 13 from forward Tim Wallen. Neither, however, was particularly effective in the second half. Muller scored 15 of his points in the opening period and Wallen 12 of his total. Longwood held down Elon's "top guns" after half-time.

Lancer wrestlers 0-3 in duals

Longwood hosted the 10th-annual Lancer Duals round-robin wrestling tournament Saturday, finishing fourth among four schools with an 0-3 record for the day. Pembroke (N.C.) State University won the Duals with a perfect 3-0 mark.

Anderson (S.C.) College placed second at 2-1, while Norfolk State University took third at 1-2 followed by the Lancers.

Pembroke beat Anderson 32-9, Longwood 28-18 and Norfolk 25-16 while Anderson knocked off Longwood 23-11 and edged Norfolk 24-23. The Lancers lost a close 23-21 decision to NSU.

Sophomore Mark Helberg led the Lancers with three individual victories at 177. Helberg pinned his PSU opponent at 6:49, took an 8-3 decision over his Anderson foe and gained a forfeit victory against NSU. Helberg improved his season record to a team-best 18-8 and is a favorite to win a Virginia State title next weekend.

Also with winning marks for Longwood were sophomores Dave Franklin, Bryan Hartley and Joe Silvus, along with senior Brent Newell. Franklin (167) and Silvus (150) were 1-0 for the day, while Hartley (158/167) and Newell (heavyweight) were each 2-1. Silvus is now 17-10 on the season, Hartley 10-11, Newell 11-11 and Franklin improved to 6-10.

"Brent is really wrestling well at this time," commented coach Steve Nelson. "He's starting to come into his own and Mark continues to be steady for us."

Others wrestling for the Lancers included freshmen Joey Hearl and Stuart Chung, sophomore Ryan Stefanko, senior Brian Jones, and juniors Randy Eno and James Mauldin. Hearl (118) and Chung (126) were each 1-1, Stefanko (142) 1-2, Jones (158/167) 0-2, Eno (190) 1-1, and Mauldin was disqualified in his match at 190 against Anderson as was his opponent.

Hearl is now 7-9, Chung 17-10, Stefanko 8-9, Jones 9-8, Eno 2-2 and Mauldin 4-8. Helberg and Chung remain ranked first in the region while Hartley, Newell and Silvus are ranked second in the region. It's Hartley and Newell's highest ranking this year. The Duals took a toll on Longwood as seven Lancers suffered various injuries on Saturday. LC could be missing up to three wrestlers for this weekend's action.

Longwood will host undefeated nationally-ranked Pittsburgh-Johnstown Friday night at 8:00 in Lancer Hall before hosting the Virginia College Division State Championships on Sunday beginning at 11:00 a.m., with the consolations and finals slated for 1:00 p.m. Also participating will be Newport News Apprentice, Norfolk State and Washington & Lee.

Baseball team optimistic about new field

By Chris Murray
Rotunda Staff

The 1993 Lancer baseball team will be playing in style this spring, due to the newly constructed baseball field. Although the field is in its last stages of construction, Coach Buddy Bolding is optimistic that his squad will get the opportunity to play on it this semester.

So why does the Longwood baseball team need a new field? Student Assistant Coach Chris Porter explains that "Longwood has a major Division II baseball program, with a below average field."

"The field is in its last stages of construction, but it's been around it, equipped with poor drainage," explains Coach Bolding.

The first phases of the project began last fall with the deconstruction of the old field and has been an ongoing process ever since.

Features of the new field include: a sprinkler system which is designed to help with maintenance, two well built dug outs, a press box, a handicap access ramp, and a seating capacity estimated at about 500.

For the 1991 Division II South Atlantic Champs, the new field will be and Assistant Coach Porter agree that the field should give Longwood baseball the recognition it deserves.

The date of completion is unknown at this time, but until then the Lancers will host their games at nearby Golubic stadium in Crewe.

It seems like all the baseball team can do now is get their season started and wait patiently for their new field. Official practice for the Lancers began last week, with the first regular season game set for February 24th against nationally ranked Francis

Virginia college basketball action hot

(AP) The normally steady Chris Brower was not. As a consequence, Virginia Commonwealth found itself in overtime against Louisville, an overtime the Rams did not survive.

With the Rams leading 77-76 with 1:17 left Saturday, Brower was fouled while attempting a 3-pointer. Brower was 10 for 10 from the free-throw line coming into the game.

Perfection left him as he made only 1 of 3. And instead of a four-point lead, the Rams led by two, a margin erased by two Clifford Rozier free throws to send the game to overtime.

Louisville went on to nip VCU 90-88 in Richmond.

"I didn't make them and we didn't win," Brower said. "You can say the whole team missed free throws, but if I had made those two, we would have won."

In other Division I action Saturday involving Virginia teams, James Madison defeated George Mason 56-50, Richmond beat American 74-73, Virginia Tech rallied over No. 15 Virginia 56-53, Old Dominion edged William & Mary 81-80, Appalachian State defeated Virginia Military 64-55, Liberty rolled over Charleston Southern 72-58 and Coastal Carolina beat Radford 96-94 in overtime.

On Sunday, East Tennessee State humiliated VMI 96-70. Louisville 90, Va. Commonwealth 88, OT=

Greg Minor scored six of Louisville's 12 points in overtime as the Cardinals stayed undefeated in the Metro Conference.

Louisville (11-5, 6-0) went ahead to stay on a free throw by Minor that made it 82-81 with 3:13 left in overtime. The Cardinals pushed their lead to 89-83 when Minor hit a 3-pointer with 1:18 remaining, but the Rams went on a 5-1 run in the final minute.

Virginia Commonwealth (10-6, 1-3) could not cleanly inbound the ball in the final 1.6 seconds.

Rozier led the Cardinals with 21 points and 18 rebounds. Virginia Tech 56, Virginia 53.

Virginia's bubble appears deflated if not completely burst.

The No. 15 Cavaliers made just five of 27 field-goal attempts in the second half as their 16-point lead slowly vanished in Richmond.

Virginia (12-4) led 40-24 with 17 minutes left, but the Cavaliers made only two field goals over the next 13 minutes. They missed 15 shots and turned it over 10 times in that span.

Shawn Smith led Virginia Tech (7-7) with 15 points. Old Dominion 81, William & Mary 80.

Two freshmen led Old Dominion in scoring Saturday but it was a senior who sewed up the game in the final seconds for the Monarchs in a Colonial Athletic Association matchup in Williamsburg.

Odell Hodge had 25 points and Mario Mullen scored 20. While Hodge and Mullen kept the Monarchs (12-5, 5-2) in the game, it was senior guard Donald Anderson who broke the Tribe's heart. Anderson scored four of his nine points in the final 24 seconds.

Old Dominion led by as many as 12 points early in the second half before William & Mary (10-7, 3-4) began eating into the lead.

The teams traded the lead late in the game until Matt Verkey's 3-pointer put the Tribe ahead 80-77 with 49 seconds left. Anderson's layup with 24 seconds left cut the lead to 80-79, and his jumper with five seconds left won the game. James Madison 56, George Mason 50.

In another CAA game, William Davis scored 20 points for James Madison (14-4, 7-0), including two free throws to put the Dukes ahead for good, 44-43, in the final five minutes.

George Mason (5-14, 0-6) pulled to within 48-47 on a 3-pointer by Derek Shackelford with 3:00 left, but failed to score on its next three possessions. Appalachian St. 64, VMI 55.

Appalachian State's Billy Ross scored a 3-pointer to tie the score at 51 with 6:10 left in Lexington against Virginia Military on Saturday.

He followed that up with another 3-pointer, a driving layup and 4-for-4 free-throw shooting to put the game out of reach.

Ross scored 23 points for Appalachian State (9-7, 6-4 Southern Conference).

VMI (5-11, 3-7) led 51-46 with 7:26 left when Appalachian State's Ricky Nedd got inside for a dunk and Billy Ross hit a 3-pointer to tie the score at 51, setting the scene for Ross' heroics. E. Tennessee St. 96, VMI 70.

In another Southern Conference game, Eric Palmer scored 22 points, including nine in a decisive second-half run Sunday, as East Tennessee State won in Lexington.

East Tennessee (11-6, 7-3) led 67-53 with 11:27 remaining. Then Palmer scored nine of the 15 points in the run that gave the visitors a 82-55 lead with 6:37 left.

VMI (5-12, 3-8) never got the lead under 20 the remainder of the game.

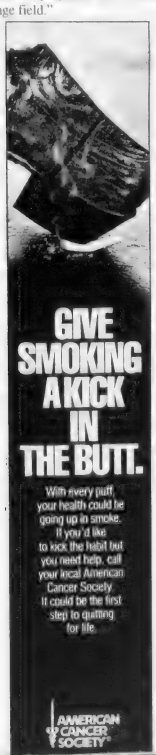
Jonathan Penn led the Keydets with 28 points. Richmond 74, American U. 73.

Kenny Wood scored 26 points and Gerald Jarmon was 4 of 4 from the free-throw line in the final 1:09 as Richmond (8-7, 4-2) defeated American (6-11, 3-4) in a CAA game in Richmond.

American's Craig Sedmak tied the score at 70 with 2:10 left. The senior scored a career-high 39 points.

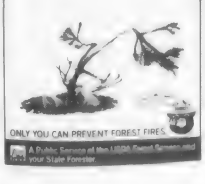
Jarmon was fouled twice and scored four points. Sedmak hit another 3-pointer with 16 seconds remaining. The Eagles' Brian Gilgeous missed a jumper with two seconds left. Coastal Carolina 96, Radford 94.

Coastal Carolina (10-8, 4-3) scored all seven of its overtime points at the free-throw line, including two from Joey Hart with four seconds left, to beat Radford (9-11, 3-4) in the Big South Conference in Conway, S.C.



The game went into overtime when Radford's Doug Day hit two free throws with one second left to tie the score at 89.

Coastal Carolina's Mohammed Acha scored 38 points. Day had 30 points for Radford. Liberty 72, Charleston Southern 58.



In small-college games, Virginia State beat Norfolk State 87-85, Hampton rolled over the District of Columbia 86-66, Hampden-Sydney downed Eastern Mennonite 94-69, Virginia Wesleyan defeated Emory & Henry 99-78 and Bridgewater outscored Lynchburg 71-58.

Methodist beat Averett 77-58, Virginia Union destroyed Bowie State 92-67, Guilford crushed Washington & Lee 81-60, Christopher Newport beat North Carolina-Wesleyan 90-75, Greensboro squeaked by Ferrum 83-82, Milligan knocked over Bluefield 106-90 and Elizabeth City State beat St. Paul's 96-88.

In Sunday's small college action, Allentown edged Shenandoah 78-75, Emory & Henry beat Randolph-Macon 67-62 and Johnson C. Smith thumped St. Paul's 94-69.

ODE TO GILLIGAN'S ISLE

Sung to the tune of the theme from Gilligans Island.

U.S.S. MINNOW

Just sit right back and you'll hear a tale,
a tale of a T.V. show—that was poorly written and kinda dumb, but we all loved it so.

The Howells had a lotta cash, but what did they need it for?—And why did Ginger bring her whole wardrobe on a three-hour tour...? A THREEEE-HOUR TOUR!

If the professor could make a radio with a stick and some coconuts—then why didn't he just build a boat to save their ship-wrecked butts?

And Gilligan would thwart their plans in almost every last scene—They should have killed and eaten him, they could have used the protein.

Now the show's in syndication, and has been for a while...

with Gilligaaaan; The Howells too; the Skipper and his stomach; the token babe;
the professor and Maryanne—
Hey don't you touch that

POLICE ARREST COUPLE HAVING INTERCOURSE ON DANCE FLOOR

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) Two police officers answering a call early Friday at a downtown Tallahassee nightclub found a young couple who gave new meaning to dirty dancing.

Officers John Beeman and Dee Crumpler received a report of a young couple having sexual intercourse on the dance floor.

"Both had their pants down around ankles and were pretty much oblivious to the fact they were being watched by about 100 other patrons on the dance floor," Tallahassee police spokesman Sgt. Phil Kiracofe told The Associated Press.

Kiracofe said Friday the young man did not know his sex partner, having just asked her to dance. They were not intoxicated, he said. "The guy didn't even know her name."

Sean David McDonald, 20, and Kristen Elizabeth Tice, 20, were charged with disorderly conduct and given a notice to appear in court.

CHEERLEADING SQUAD GIVES RIVALS PAN OF LAXATIVE-LACED BROWNIES

FISHER, Ill. (AP) A pan of brownies given to Fisher High School cheerleaders by their rivals were laced with a laxative, causing diarrhea, stomach cramps and hives.

Michael Company, principal at LeRoy High School, acknowledged that a LeRoy cheerleader put two laxative packages into the brownies before they were offered at a game between the schools Jan. 26.

He declined to disclose how the student was punished, but a letter of apology was sent to Fisher.

The Fisher Bunnies edged the LeRoy Panthers, 63-62.

200-YEAR-OLD CHEESE BOUGHT AT BRITISH AUCTION

LONDON (AP) A British collector coughed up $1,500 Wednesday for a handful of smelly brown Tibetan cheese that is said to be 200 years old.

"I have had a quick sniff of it though and I wouldn't be surprised if it is even older than 200 years," said Simon Perry, who will add the hardened ounce of Tibetan cheese to a collection of several thousand cheeses he keeps in the cellar of his house.

Sotheby's spokesman Chris Proudlove said it was the first time the company had sold a piece of food.

Vandalism prompts formation of Frazer watch group

By Doug Dimarino
Rotunda Staff

Many people, including students, faculty, and administration have become aware of the problems with vandalism in Frazer Hall and feel that it is a big problem.

In the Fall '92 semester, vandalism in Frazer alone equalled $1,206.89, with South Cunningham the closest with only $444.67.

Total vandalism reported for the Fall '92 semester in all residence halls combined equalled approximately $3,457, which means that vandalism in all residence halls, excluding Frazer, is a mere $2,253.

As you can see, this vandalism figure for Frazer is astronomical compared to the other dorms around campus: it accounts for approximately 34% of the total vandalism reported in all residence halls combined.

Mike Herndon, the REC of Frazer, has been working diligently to try and reduce the amount of vandalism in the building. Along with the assistance of the presidents of the three fraternities housed in Frazer, Frazer Hall Council, and Resident Assistants, Herndon has implemented a program called "Frazer Watch" to help reduce vandalism in the building.

Frazer Watch is a student-run organization that monitors the building in an attempt to make people consider the consequences of their actions before destroying property or to catch the guilty party in the act of vandalizing.

These students patrol the building Thursday-Saturday between the hours of 10:00p.m. and 2:00a.m. Herndon says, "Although it does not seem the amount of vandalism has been reduced, the Frazer Watch program has created more opportunities to catch the individuals that are vandalizing our building."

He hopes that in time people will realize that others are watching and individuals will be held accountable for their own actions, which many members of the Longwood community will help reduce the amount of destruction in the building drastically.

Since the formation of Frazer Watch, many students are making it their responsibility to watch for acts of vandalism and reporting them to proper authorities.

A number of incidents have been reported directly to either RA's or Herndon by residents, and others have even left anonymous notes in Herndon's office explaining the vandalism that occurred, along with a name of the guilty party.

"Students are becoming more aware of what is going on and students are feeling more inclined to turn people in because they are tired of paying for the irresponsible actions of others," says Herndon.

Last semester, the most common acts of vandalism had been stolen or ripped screens in hall and staircase windows and replacing ceiling tiles.

Although those are the most common, there have been many more costly expenses, such as: broken elevators due to overcrowding, broken water fountain, stolen vacuum cleaner, damaged doors, discharged fire extinguishers, and excessive trash in hallways and staircases.

Some residents of Frazer feel that much of the vandalism is done by non-residents after social events that have occurred in the building.

Herndon is presently working on new ways to control the problems that may be linked to the social events to ensure that non-residents as well as residents do not vandalize the building.

A his most recent suggestions and recommendations, some of which have already been implemented, include: locking common room doors in lobby, checking ID's at front door in lobby, enforcing policy of residents escorting their guests, maintaining desk hours until 4a.m. on weekends, not allowing social organizations to schedule simultaneous events, having fraternities designate members to assist in crowd control and checking ID's in lobby areas during social events, monitor the use of security keys by non residents, locking front doors on weekends and have campus police assist with entry into the building after social events, and enforcing party regulation policies.

Many students feel that if each individual makes it a part of their responsibility to report vandalism in all residence halls, it will greatly reduce the costs incurred.

Construction hot topic on campus

By Debbie Wilson
Rotunda Staff

The office of the Vice President for Business Affairs is in charge of delegating money to those areas of and on campus that need it and for dealing with the business aspects of running the college.

On campus, construction is a hot topic since the building of ARC, the new dormitory, and the increasing student enrollment.

At the top of the list is the renovation of Hiner and Ruffner. Since these changes are state funded, and the state is giving less money to colleges and universities, they may not take place in the immediate future.

The next major change will be the construction of an additional dining hall.

This may take place sooner than the renovations, however, because it will be funded through student fees. Plans for construction to begin are set for the 1995-96 academic year, with the opening set for the 1996-67 academic year.

Currently, our two dining halls together only feed 2300 students at a time. The new one would hold 3000. The new dining hall will be built next to Iler, where a basketball court and parking lot is currently located. The outside will be remodeled to look like a new building.

Presently, the school is working on campus beautification, including projects like the building of a new gateway and the baseball field. During Christmas break, 18 trees were planted throughout the campus.

The gateway is currently under construction at the corner of Redford Street and Main Street, next to Curry and Frazer. The baseball field is nearing completion with the installment of the bleachers.

The other big plan for this semester is an RFP, or request for proposal, for an automatic teller machine. This will probably be installed on the ground floor of Lankford on the Stubbs' side.

The business affairs office also oversees everything from the maintenance of buildings and grounds, shipping and receiving, and the golf course to construction of new buildings, purchasing, personnel, setting tuition, and legislative procedures and correspondence. Just about the only thing this office is not in charge of, monetarily, is printing, telecommunications, and financial aid.

Women's colleges reap bumper crop of applicants

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP) Whether from a new feminism or changing social mores, some women's colleges - once viewed as an endangered species - are reaping a bumper crop of applicants, school officials say.

"What we could be seeing is that women's colleges are moving back into the mainstream," said Mary Maples Dunn, president of Smith College. "We were more out of the mainstream when people were thinking that coeducation was the way to go."

This year's applications at the Northampton women's school have already reached a record of more than 2,900, up 10 percent over last year, according to B. Ann Wright, dean of enrollment.

Officials at several other women's schools, including First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton's alma mater, Wellesley College, also reported increases Thursday. Wellesley is up 14 percent over last year, Barnard 12 percent, Bryn Mawr 8 percent, and Mount Holyoke at least 4 percent, according to school officials.

They suggest several factors that may be heightening acceptance of women's college: changed objectives and broader acceptance of feminism, long-term social changes such as more divorces and women in the work force, a larger number of women in higher education, recent role models such as Mrs. Clinton and Anita Hill, and widespread publicity over a national report last year that documented sex bias in classrooms.

"Five years ago, the kind of stories you would see in the press were what we would refer to jokingly as: 'How long can this dinosaur go on?'" said Debra Thomas, a spokesman for Bryn Mawr, the women's college in a Pennsylvania town of that name.

The number of women's colleges in the United States dropped from a peak of 298 in 1960 to 84 today, according to the Women's College Coalition in Washington, D.C. Half closed, and the other half turned coed, with most of those changes coming in the 1960s and early 1970s.

Between 1986 and 1992, enrollment at women's colleges, nearly all private, grew 3.5 percent to 85,800. The increase was modest compared to the 13 percent rise in overall enrollment of men and women at private schools during the same period, according to statistician Norman Brandt at the U.S. Office of Education Research.

However, some officials said Thursday they had only begun to see significant increases last year.

Smith College officials, who set up a committee in the 1970s to study accepting men, felt confident enough for the first time this year to market the school largely as a place for women.

"It's where women come first and do best," blares the latest Smith brochure.

Though former First Ladies Barbara Bush and Nancy Reagan went to Smith, the college had previously billed itself mainly as a top liberal arts institution, the enrollment dean said.

Dunn believes the school, with an enrollment of 2,500 women, has benefited as the share of women enrolled in higher education, compared to men, rose from 30 percent in 1950 to 52 percent today.

She also said that the growing numbers of broken families and women in the work force have "increased awareness ... into what young women are going to need through their lives."

Female educators also said that some feminist thinkers are taking a new look at the value of separate education for women.

"There has been a kind of about-face," said Jadwiga Sebrechts, director of the Women's College Coalition. "There's been a realization that ... opening the doors and putting women in the desks ... next to the men did not ensure equality of educational experience."

A report by the Wellesley Center for Research on Women, released a year ago, documented sex bias against women in classrooms. Janet Lavin, director of admission at Wellesley, said the publicity from that report and Mrs. Clinton, a 1969 graduate who talks readily about the school, have helped promote interest in that school.

"Hillary has made a difference in our applicant pool this year," Lavin said. "We're very grateful for the publicity she has given us."

Educational achievement test to be given locally

Thirty three Longwood College students from the education department will be performing educational achievement tests on students from the local areas.

These educational tests will examine the students' levels in subjects such as the language arts, including reading and spelling, science, arithmetic, and other subjects.

Heading and supervising these tests will be Dr. Terry Overton of the special education department. She is responsible for taking the appointments for testing during the period of February thirteenth to the twenty-fourth of April. All testing will be done over the weekends on the Longwood College campus.

Since the testing is done as an educational experience for the education majors, there will be no fees charged to the parents.

Generally, most testing of this sort, when done privately, can cost up twenty-five hundred dollars. This cost is occasionally covered by insurance companies.

However, if the price is too high for the testing to be done privately, the parents can go through the local community school system.

Yet, they will have to relinquish their privacy as all test results will go to the school.

Of course, the main benefit for the parents is that the educational testing done at Longwood will show them the education level their child is on. This will enable the parent to follow the progress of their child and see where strengths and weaknesses lie.

Bachelor of Fine Arts eliminates foreign language requirement

By Carol Semones
Staff Writer

Recently, the requirements for a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree at Longwood have been changed to exclude the foreign language requirement.

Professor Mark Baldridge, head of the Art Department, said that in the process of fulfilling the three-credit requirement at a 202 level or above, art students had to neglect the electives which relate directly to their fields of study.

This change came about after a study of the Bachelor of Fine Arts programs at other colleges.

The investigating committee found that a majority, if not all of the schools, did not require Art majors to take the foreign languages.

Doctor Baldridge also said that the B.F.A. tends to be neglected as a separate degree and somewhere down the line, after being clumped with the B.A., was given similar requirements.

PERSPECTIVES

Great volunteer opportunity arises

There is going to be a marvelous opportunity coming for a number of dedicated Longwood students.

This Spring break, rather than spending time at the beach or some other vacation spot, students should consider volunteering their time and effort in making the world a little bit better for those less fortunate: they should contemplate becoming involved in the Alternative Spring Break program.

Basically, this is an opportunity for a group of students to travel to Kentucky to get involved in the Habitat for Humanity program there. There is a cost involved, but probably no more than most of you were planning to spend on your holiday revels.

Trey Piersall, organizer of the event, has spent many hours in recent months coordinating volunteer efforts for this, as well as other community projects. He more than anyone realizes the importance of volunteer work, not only in helping to create a better world (idealistic as it sounds, this is the case), but also in its role as a confidence and skill builder. In a situation such as this every person who is involved benefits.

What it comes down to is this: volunteering is never merely a give-take relationship, it is a give-give relationship.

Two greeks question editorial

Editor, Rotunda:

The latest edition of Longwood's Rotunda was most disturbing. First of all, the Rotunda is Longwood's paper, not your own personal journal. Why must the Rotunda constantly bash our greek system? I do not believe that within this academic year we have read one article on the college's paper concerning the numerous positive attributes of our greek system and community. Here we would like to respond to several points in your editorial and then add several of our own.

1. Every square inch of space given to greeks on this campus is rented. We pay for the use of our chapter rooms. The college does not give this space to us free of charge.

2. The plaques in the Rotunda for the Sigma Sigma Sigma, Alpha Sigma Alpha, Zeta Tau Alpha, and Kappa Delta sororities have a great deal to do with Longwood's history — much like the Rotunda. These four sororities bring great recognition to our college and are known collectively as the Farmville Four across the nation.

3. You also state that a number of leadership resident assistant positions are filled by Greeks on our campus. This is true here and nationally. The majority of members of Congress are greeks as well as many of our presidents [sic]—Thomas Jefferson, Ronald Reagan and George Bush just to name a few. The majority of business executives were also in sororities or fraternities while in college. It is clear that greek life had a good impact on these peoples [sic] lives and gave them some of the skills necessary to be successful with their chosen careers.

4. One of the more disturbing parts of your editorial is the section on Steve Dealph, the Greek Affairs Coordinator here at Longwood. You state that Steve is indeed paid by the college. We doubt it you know this, but he lives here on campus. This for several reasons. First of all, as you should know since you printed his salary, he does not make a great deal of money. For the work Steve puts into this college, his is, like many administrators, underpaid [sic]. Not only does Steve work with the greek community, he also serves as an advisor to the Judicial Board, chairs the RA selection committee, and is part of the residence life staff by being on call for R.A.'s several weekends a year. Steve also assists with the residence life staff with R.A. training each fall. I'm sure that Steve's salary is more than covered with the activity fees paid by this college's greek population every year.

5. You have severely discredited our college's paper by writing about Longwood's greeks: "these are groups whose roots are based on two of the most foul human traits imaginable: discrimination and violence." What else can we say other than you are ignorant and dead wrong. You also make a ludicrous comparison between greeks and the Nazi Youth organizations which were prevalent in Germany in the late 1930's and during World War II. This clearly shows your sensationalism and lack of good judgment (one member of our fraternity who is Jewish was clearly offended by this comparison).

6. As usual with greek bashing, the benefits our community as a whole, Longwood and Farmville, receive from greeks was not mentioned. Our own fraternity is one of the largest sponsors of the local Prince Edward County United Way drive each year. We also sponsor an annual scholarship in the name of David Buchanan, one of our Brothers who was also a member of Chi and the Longwood Ambassadors, who passed away the summer after he graduated. We also do the clean the highway program, work with the Farmville police each Halloween to patrol the streets to ensure safety for tricker-treaters, and this year we are organizing the March of Dimes walk here in Farmville. This is just some of the work our own fraternity does, the philanthropic work each fraternity and sorority provides in total is amazing. Each year our greek community collectively provides thousands of hours of work and raises thousands of dollars for worthy groups.

7. Yes we are social groups. Yes we have parties. Yes we can have a great time and provide the same for non-greeks. Yes the administration recognizes the positive impact greek life can give our college: So what? Do they give us an unfair proportion of their time? I doubt it. Phyllis Mable works closely with many student groups who just happen to be non-greek and I know from what I've personally seen she will do nearly anything to assist student run organizations.

Ms. McCay if [sic] you truly have nothing against the greek community here at Longwood, why do you continue to portray such a negative image of us? Hopefully this will help portray more clear picture [sic] of greek life here at Longwood.

Two concerned greeks,
Gregg C. Baird & Patrick Wright

Editor's Note: Every issue of last semester's Rotunda,but two, contained at least one article on greek life, many of which were located on the front page.

Non-greek has doubts, but questions expression of views

Editor, Rotunda:

As a non-greek, I have my doubts about the fraternities and sororities on this campus; however, I found your expression of views in the last edition of the Rotunda to be quite extreme and rather puerile. I would like to remind you that greek organizations pay rent on their chapter rooms — Longwood does not provide these rooms freely. It is important to point out that, in addition to the sorority dorm, Longwood has an Academic Residence Community dorm. I would also like to comment that, whether you like it or not, several greek organizations have made notable contributions to Longwood — contributions that are worthy of a plaque in the Rotunda. I find no reason in your conclusion that being in a fraternity or sorority has a connection with getting a good job on campus. Please keep in mind that, even if you might have personal problems with the system, greeks have made and continue to have a positive impact on this campus.

As I stated before, I am non-greek. Yet I am not so caught up in my independence to not understand that others find greek life rewarding. Your comparison of social greeks to Hitler Youth is nothing short of absurd. It makes me wonder why you must go to such extremes to express yourself. I imagine that your ultimate goal is to get attention on campus. This, of course, is a marvelous intention. However, the attention that you are receiving is negative, and I have always noticed that no attention is better than the kind your newspaper is getting.

Sincerely,
Kendra Hipkins

Reader thanks paper for editorial

Editor, Rotunda:

Thank you for your brazen and truthful attitude about the college's disgusting support of the greek system. You make several points which raise questions that I want to see answered. One point you did not make however, is the simple fact that most of the greeks are hated by others on campus. If they are God's gift to humanity, why is this true?

You will probably get numerous letters castigating(for the greeks who are reading this, that means criticizing) your editorial, but I have a sneaking suspicion that the morons and brainwashed brothers and sisters of the greek society will miss the point of the article.

There is no doubt in my mind that this will be printed along side letters written by the demi-gods of Longwood putting themselves up on pedestals not even addressing the points brought up by the editorial. What can you expect when you are dealing with people who are so blatantly blind to issues which do not cater to their own petty point of view?

Sadly, because my name will be included, I realize that I will run the risk of some stupid retaliation from the childish greek community. Screw them. The truth needs to come out.

John Andros

Reader deems editorial blatantly prejudicial

Editor, Rotunda:

I am thoroughly disgusted with The Rotunda's decision to print an article that blatantly displays a prejudicial attitude. By demeaning the Greek system and stating, "Way to go Longwood—you've really made it clear who you think is important," the Rotunda has shown that it does not tolerate a portion of this college. The purpose of Civility Week is to encourage Longwood students to respect each other's differences. It is obvious to me that The Rotunda has not kept this in mind.

Longwood does support Greek organizations by having a sorority dorm, fraternity halls, plaques in the dining hall and Rotunda area, and a Greek affairs coordinator. In refutation of these points, it is important to remember that Longwood supports other people on campus by awarding them specific halls. The International Studies Hall and Eco hall are perfect examples of this. If one wants to live in ARC, a specific grade point average is required. Does this mean that people with high grade point averages are more important than others? The plaques in the dining hall and Rotunda area commemorate the Greeks because of their important contributions to campus. Several sororities were founded at Longwood, and that is a part of the history of the college that deserves to be acknowledged. The Greek affairs coordinator is important because the Greeks need to be unified and organized. Longwood advertises itself as being a "community," and the Greek affairs coordinator helps to bring everyone together.

The Greek system is often put down and thought to be harmful to the Longwood community. Unfortunately, this view has been formed because the Greeks are thought to only serve a social purpose. This assumption of social purposes is incorrect. All fraternities and sororities have charity organizations to which they contribute, plus they promote togetherness, friendship, and high ideals. Above all, Greek organizations bring spirit to the Longwood campus, and they build future leaders of America. Greek organizations also contribute to the Farmville community by doing things such as adopting grandmothers at the Weyanoke Inn, or patrolling the streets of Farmville during Halloween.

I think I can speak for the entire Greek community when I say that we are personally insulted by the bias of The Rotunda. I work very hard for my organization, and I was angry when I discovered that the Greeks were not positively represented in other parts of the paper. My advice is this: the next time you personally insult a lot of people on this campus, don't even bother to print the rest of the paper—I know I didn't get past the first page.

Classes + roomates + life = STRESS

By Debbie Wilson
Staff Writer

Along with the stress of college classes comes the stress of college life.

Among other things, this includes having a roommate for possibly the first time in one's life.

And it's not always possible to live with someone in such close quarters, whether you get along with the person or not.

When asked about their worst roommate experiences, some students were hesitant to tell their stories. No one wanted their names disclosed for fear of retribution.

One story I was told involved three roommates. Two of them decided to gang up against the third. Whenever the third roommate would leave the room, she would always leave her desk light on. The other two got fed up with this and decided to break her lightbulb each time she left it on.

Once this got old, the two roommates would find other ways to torture the third, such as by throwing her pumpkin out the window.

Another account of revenge involved someone who didn't care too much for his roommate. Therefore, after being hassled almost to death by a friend of his, he finally gave in and revealed his roommate's secret Chi identity.

Other problems consist of everything from fighting over a boyfriend and reporting a roommate to the honor or judicial board, to getting in fist fights and seeing your roommate puke and then getting sick after him.

To help students deal with all this stress, Pete Pazmino, the RA on second floor North Cunningham, put a few pointers up on the hallway bulletin board on how to confuse roommates. Here are some highlights:

*During the night sit up every hour on the hour and say, "It's time."

*Whenever a bell rings stand up and shake your head violently.

*Whenever you leave the room drop a coin in the bucket.

*When the phone rings answer the door. When there's a knock at the door answer the phone. Complain about pranksters.

*Argue for closet space on behalf of your imaginary friend.

*Sit in front of the open refrigerator door with a spcargun muttering, "penguins, penguins, penguins...."

*Bang your head against the wall repeatedly while shouting, "Nupe it!"

*Any time your roommate enters the room say to the television, "See, I told you."

*Put three clocks side by side on the dresser. Make one five minutes slow, one correct, and one five minutes fast. Label them past, present, and future.

*Offer to floss your roommate's teeth. If he/she refuses, go off on a tirade about gumline gingivitis.

*Listen to a tape of assorted cricket chirpings. Occasionally nod your head affirmatively and mutter, "how true, how true."

If none of the above works, there's not much hope left. Perhaps you should just find a new roommate.

Ashe dies

NEW YORK (AP) —Arthur Ashe, a pioneering black tennis player who crusaded off the court for human rights and AIDS research, died Saturday of AIDS-related pneumonia. He was 49.

Ashe, the only black man ever to win the Wimbledon championship and the U.S. Open, revealed April 8 that he had AIDS in an emotional news conference prompted by his fear that a newspaper was about to publish the story.

He said he was infected by a blood transfusion during heart bypass surgery, probably in 1983.

He became active in the fight against AIDS, forming a fund-raising foundation and joining the boards of the Harvard AIDS Institute and the UCLA AIDS Institute.

Ashe won the singles crowns of all the coveted tennis tournaments, including Wimbledon, the U.S. Open and the World Championship Tennis Finals.

In 1970, he helped get South Africa banned from the Davis Cup because of the nation's apartheid policies.

After suffering a heart attack in 1979, Ashe retired from competitive tennis in 1980 and became non-playing captain of the U.S. Davis Cup team. He led the Davis Cup team to victory in 1981 and 1982.

A DISPATCH FROM SPY MAGAZINE

The Fine Print

Land of the Free

Many times, successful professionals are asked why they wanted to work at the jobs they hold. The answers given are usually earnest and unsurprising: excitement, personal fulfillment, the chance to earn a living wage. All these reasons are important, of course, but seldom is one of the most compelling reasons mentioned: In certain occupations, when there is a big event, those in attendance get free stuff. Here is a list of items that attendees at some of last summer's major events received gratis

Members of the media who attended the Democratic National Convention in New York last July received a New York Times duffel bag; a CNN cloth book bag; a New York Telephone charge card, worth $1; a Visitors' Consumer Tips card ("Pay only the meter amount. The charge is for the taxi; it is not a per person charge"); a Roosevelt Hospital medical-hot-lines wallet card, featuring the instruction "DIAL 911"; and a coupon for 10 percent off purchases at Herman's World of Sporting Goods stores.

Delegates to the Republican National Convention in Houston last August received a bolo tie; several HOWDY FROM HOUSTON postcards; a baseball hat; a golf cap; a TEXAS pin; several VIP gift bags and tote bags; sunglasses; binoculars; two cassettes of country-and-western music; a bandana; a Compaq hand fan; a coffee mug; a HOUSTON OILERS drinking glass; a Helene Curtis health-and-beauty gift pack; Jhirmack haircare samples; a HOUSTON SKYLINE photo album; an OILERS pin; First Interstate Bank key chains; Arthur Andersen and Foley's department store T-shirts; HOUSTON WELCOME memo pads; Christmas cards; jalapeño suckers, Nuprin; Tylenol; Theragran-M; Maalox tablets; and Therapeutic mineral ice.

Delegates also received a daily gift package. On Sunday they got a fruit basket and a bottle of Texas wine; on Monday, 11 kinds of Nabisco snacks; on Tuesday, a Plexiglas boot filled with M&M's and Mars candies; on Wednesday, a Risk board game and sparkling water; and Thursday, fortune cookies and a Y'ALL COME BACK! balloon.

Husband and wife team perform "Dichterliebe" in Wygal

By Gray Lipford
Staff Writer

Renowned tenor, James McDonald, and his wife, pianist Ruth Ann McDonald performed a concert in Wygal, Tuesday, January 26. They performed "Dichterliebe" (Poet's Love) by Robert Schumann and "A Journey In Words and Music."

"Dichterliebe" is a series of sixteen poems from the "Lyrisches Intermezzo" of Heinrich Heine.

The music was composed in May of 1840 in a single week's time. The theme of the poems, which were all written and sung in German, was of, unrequited love, in moods ranging from fanciful to sorrow.

The composition was masterfully done and the music complemented McDonald's powerful voice which could command attention through a change in tone.

The music, as performed by Ruth Ann McDonald, a wonderful pianist, was beautiful with frequent changes in tempo and tone.

The arrangement would move from light and frivolous to dark and heavy as the performance went on almost as if there was a series of different songs.

The pauses between movements, however seemed a tad long and detracted from the performance.

Additionally, the music went on for a little to long after the end of the lyrics and moved the mood from the sad lyrics to an almost light tone which did not give the sense of continuity.

James McDonald also hardly changed expressions through out the piece whether singing happy lyrics or sad and it also did not do much for the performance.

"A Journey in Words and Music" is a compilation of songs and poems which were read with authors and composers including Benjamin Britten, Ogden Nash, Frantz Liszt, Robert Browning, William Shakespeare, William Blake, and some children's sayings.

The theme of this presentation was of love and life and included works like "Shall I Compare Thee" and children's sayings like, "If you don't want to have a baby, you better use a contraption."

It was lighter than the first part of the concert. All in all it was an enjoyable concert.

The McDonalds are performers in the Washington, D.C. area where James McDonald has performed at the national Symphony and at the Kennedy Center. He has studied in England and Germany and is on the voice/opera faculty at the University of Maryland.

Ruth McDonald, who just completed her Doctorate, coaches students at the American Institute for Musical Studies in Granz, Austria. She is writing a book on the songs of Franz Liszt and has also performed at the Kennedy Center.

McEntire recalls both good times and bad

NEW YORK (AP) It's been two years since her band members died in a plane crash, but Reba McEntire says those departed friends are never far from her.

"I don't know where we go when we die. I don't know if we become guardian angels, but I feel their presence an awful lot," the 37-year-old country singer says in the March issue of Ladies' Home Journal.

The plane crash was just one of the hard times McEntire survived. There was a painful divorce, and a brush with death late last year when her plane was forced to make an emergency touchdown with a bad landing gear.

Things have gotten a lot better.

"I've never been this happy, this content," says McEntire, who is remarried and has a 3-year-old son. "The truth is, I've never had this much fun."

Ali fights again

DEERFIELD BEACH, Fla. (AP) Muhammad Ali put up his legendary dukes one more time - but instead of a new title belt, all he got was a T-shirt.

The former world heavyweight boxing champ playfully battled Jeff Wilson, a junior, during a visit Thursday to Deerfield Beach High to promote Big Brothers and Big Sisters.

Ali posed for pictures and passed out autographed pamphlets on Islam and on AIDS.

"It's a good deed. And it'll get you to heaven quicker," Ali said.

Though he's been slowed by Parkinson's disease, the champ has lost none of his trademark sassiness.

"I came all this way and this is all I get?" he asked after receiving a red T-shirt from B.A.A.D. - Black Athletes Against Drugs.

President Bush still not forgotten by some

HOUSTON (AP) He may be former President Bush, but he's certainly not forgotten.

Spokesman Andy Maner says Bush gets about 1,500 pieces of mail daily at his offices in Houston and Washington.

Many are notes of appreciation, but the mail also brings T-shirts, bumper stickers, caps, ties and trinkets, Maner said.

Someone even sent a cheese cake.

"Needless to say, it was in poor condition when it arrived," Maner said Thursday.

Many of the items are likely to wind up at the Bush presidential library, which will be built at Texas A&M University.

Whoopie Goldberg, Chevy Chase both given Hasty Pudding Award

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) Whoopi Goldberg and Chevy Chase have been named woman and man of the year by Harvard's Hasty Pudding Theatricals, the nation's oldest undergraduate dramatic organization.

Goldberg will be honored with a parade through Harvard Square on Feb. 16 and Chase will be presented with the traditional "Pudding Pot" Feb. 23.

Whoopie Goldberg has acted in the films "The Color Purple," "Ghost," and "Sister Act" and also is a comedienne.

Chevy Chase was a writer and performer with the original cast of NBC's "Saturday Night Live," and also has acted in films.

Alternative spring break offered

By Jennifer O'Neal
Staff Writer

Does anyone out there have a soft spot in his or her heart? Does anyone want to help out his fellow man or woman?

Well, here is your chance. Trey Piersall, who is currently coordinating volunteers for the G.I.V.E. Clearinghouse, has organized an Alternative Spring Break in Kentucky, rebuilding and repairing houses for those who are in need.

At the moment, Piersall is trying to get tools donated so the group will be able to do more efficient and effective work.

Presently, the cost of the trip is $90.00, but Peirsall hopes that fund-raisers can be organized so that the price will decrease.

Another advantage to taking a part in the Alternative Spring Break is that students can gain volunteer hours towards graduation. This seems to be a growing requirement for many colleges and universities.

A special house was built especially for the volunteers. It is brand new, has all the modern conveniences, and can comfortably sleep 20.

Many universities participate in the annual Alternative Spring Break.

Piersall hopes to keep the group together after they return, so they can discuss what happened, how they feel, and what was accomplished.

Piersall key in forming new graduate student association

By Jennifer O'Neal
Staff Writer

Do you ever see people walking around campus that look just a bit older than the average college age student?

Believe it or not, Longwood has many graduate students, but it seems that some of them feel that their rights as students are being taken away.

Trey Piersall is the man that is trying to change all that. He and others have recently started an association just for graduate students.

There are between 200 and 300 students pursuing Masters Degrees. Some are full time, but many are part time.

There are a many things that graduate students have to live without, such as a guaranteed seat on the SGA Senate. Getting a seat is one of the association's biggest goals.

Piersall has high hopes for the association. Not only does he want the group to perform as a student activism group, but he also hopes that members will gather socially for events, such as picnics, and also for moral support.

He also wants the graduate students to be recognized as a class. The group is planning many workshops on subjects such as stress management.

Piersall hopes that the Graduate Student Association will act as a voice for concerns and be a liaison between faculty, staff, and administration.

The group is hoping to have one specified program a month. Many will consist of panels of Ph.D.'s and members of the administration.

Lee photography collection on exhibit at Bedford gallery

By Karen Cosby
Staff Writer

The Korean Architect, Kang Up Lee, is currently exhibiting a collection of 26 color photographs in Bedford Gallery. The photographs will be on exhibit until February 26.

Lee focuses upon Buddhist temples and other representations of Buddha. The photography sites were chosen by poong-su "the art of placement" which emphasizes harmony with the surrounding natural environment.

Particularly interesting were photographs of the Haemsa temple taken in three seasons.

Lee emphasizes the uses of light and shadow, most notably in his photographs of temple gates, passages, and doors.

He earned bachelor's and master's degrees in architecture from the University of California at Berkeley and the master of Urban Design form Harvard University.

Lee was named one of "100 Future Leaders of Korea" as a former Director of City Planning in Seoul. Currently, he is a professor of architecture and a department head at Korea University.

The exhibit is part of an international emphasis in Longwood's Art Department.

In Review: Sommersby

By Patricia Bibby
Associated Press Writer

Anyone who has ever known shame and wanted to start life anew will recognize a little glimpse of himself in "Sommersby," the story of one man's quest to do just that.

When Jack Sommersby (Richard Gere) returns to his plantation in Vine Hill, Tenn., after six years of fighting in the Civil War, he returns a changed man. Once harsh and violent, Sommersby seems chastened by the war and eager to win back the love of his life, Laurel (Jodie Foster).

Laurel has had to endure her own share of hardship - raising their young son by herself and trying to farm their barren land. It seems the only comfort she's had was from family friend Orin Meecham (Bill Pullman), who was hoping to win her over for himself.

At first, the exchanges between Sommersby and his wife are tentative, their timing awkward.

And Sommersby doesn't seem to remember that before he left, they slept in separate beds. However their stiffness dissolves when Sommersby has Laurel shave off his matted beard to reveal the new man beneath it. Director Jon Amiel renders a bit of movie magic with this scene: Laurel levels her long-simmering anger, blade stroking the coarse hair from his neck, while Sommersby sits totally vulnerable. The timing and the tension are perfect, and the outcome - a subtle spell of newfound intimacy - is almost palpable.

Gere and Foster have a sweetly endearing chemistry as they dance and swirl about each other discovering a love they had never known. In fact, that love begins to seem as new and mysterious as Sommersby himself.

Is he in fact the same man or merely an impostor? The family dog doesn't seem to recognize him, but all the townspeople do. Sommersby recalls the shirt he wore on his wedding night, how much his father paid for a slave, the nicknames of friends. But then the cobbler notices that his foot is smaller than when he left, and Sommersby's signature has changed. Just who is this man?

Whoever the old Sommersby was, the new one is determined to bring back his fallow land and be a loving husband to his wife and their new daughter. And all would seem well until he is arrested for killing a man while on his hiatus.

During the trial, Sommersby and his wife are forced to examine their souls and determine what means the most to them, no matter what their pasts or who they were. But their soul-searching could have tragic consequences.

Based on the film "The Return of Martin Guerre," "Sommersby" offers a slightly more complex plot and a fairly modified storyline. If there are any flaws, it would be that Amiel's pacing could have been faster - at times, the film feels as long as a summer afternoon.

But it's a lovely afternoon to look at. Filmed entirely in Virginia, partly in Farmville, many of the scenes have a warm, intimate feel, as if the sets were created from the paintings of Mary Cassatt - you can almost smell the ham in the oven.

In the end, "Sommersby" makes a compelling case about the price of remaking one's name and reputation. It's a tenderly affecting story in which Gere and Foster offer their performances in perfect minuet: one turn delicate, the next turn gut-wrenching.

"Sommersby" was produced by Arnon Milchan and Steven Reuther with Gere and Maggie Wilde as executive producers. It was written by Nicholas Meyer and Sarah Kernochan. The Warner Bros. film is rated PG-13.

The Music Scene

By Stephen Wright Music Columnist

"You mean that you're one of those Dead heads?"

"I've heard that all those people are on drugs!"

"What do you see in them, any way?"

Over the years, I've been asked these questions, and numerous others, over and over. I've always felt, however, that no amount of explaining could do justice to these questions. One must go to a concert in order to fully appreciate the Grateful Dead.

But perhaps I can give a general idea of what is behind the Grateful Dead mystique.

"What should I expect when I get to a concert?" is a commonly asked question. The first thing people notice when they arrive is the parking lot.

Many have described the parking lot as having a carnival-like atmosphere. In fact, there are many people who never even go into the concert itself, choosing, rather, to walk the lot.

Walking through, a person may be a bit overwhelmed by the sights and sounds. There are scores of Dead heads who have "opened shop" out of the back of their cars. It is possible, and even encouraged, to barter for certain goods.

"Well, what do they sell?" The variety of things sold is virtually limitless. You'll see everything from shirts to beers, beads to veggie fajitas: a person can find and buy just about anything (legal and illegal) in the parking lot.

You will notice wonderful and exotic smells in the air: patchouli oil and frying vegetables give the feel of an Middle-eastern marketplace.

Adding to the atmosphere is the cacophony of sounds one will encounter. Drums being beaten upon and guitars being strummed will be encountered.

You will also hear the curious hissing sound of balloons being filled by large tanks of nitrous oxide, which are then sold for recreational use. All of these things are just a small sampling of what makes up the "parking lot."

"Will I feel out of place, and what will the people be like? Do they all do drugs?" No one is out of place at a Grateful Dead concert.

In fact, one of the great things about the concerts is the diversity of the people who attend. Everyone is welcome and no one is made to feel unwanted. The second part of the question requires some explanation.

"What exactly is a Dead head?" To begin with, you do not become a Dead head by going out and buying a tie-dye and Birkenstocks (sandals commonly worn by Dead heads).

Nor do you become one by joining a fan club or organization. The term "Dead head" is generally given to someone with a love for the Grateful Dead musically, as well as a love for life. Many Dead heads are active in environmental issues and support many causes, such as human and animal rights, as well as other causes important to making a better world.

They are students, business people, doctors, and people of all other professions. They are of all races, genders, and ages.

As far as drugs are concerned, yes, there is a large number of people at concerts who do drugs, just as there are at any other concert. But this should not make someone wary of going.

Drugs are a personal choice, not a necessity. Therefore, newcomers should not feel any pressure to do them.

Unfortunately, there are many people who believe that in order to be considered a "Dead head" they must only listen to the music and abuse drugs.

This is just not the case. Attending concerts and perhaps touring (following the band from one concert to the next), as well as adopting a lifestyle based on love and respect for all living creatures and the Earth is perhaps the best definition for a "Dead head."

"What are the concerts like?" Concerts generally last about three hours, with a half hour intermission. They follow a distinct pattern. The band plays songs in two sets, with guitarists Jerry Garcia and Bob Weir alternating vocals.

After the first set and the intermission, the band returns to open the second set, and then goes into a unique segment.

After one or two songs, all the band members (except the drummers) leave the stage. Drummers Mickey Hart and Bill Kreutzman then go into a rhythmic frenzy of different and mesmerizing beats.

This drum solo is not surprisingly referred to as "Drums." Soon the other members return to start another strange and unique sequence. With their guitars distorted to give an eerie and futuristic sound, Garcia and Weir go into improvised solos, resulting in a sound straight out of a science fiction movie.

This piece is fittingly referred to as "Space." The group then segues out of "Space" and into another song. After five or six more songs, the band leaves the stage, only to return to do an encore.

Its now been six years since I first attended a Grateful Dead concert. Since then, I have been to forty-seven others, doing six tours.

To this day, the experiences I have had while touring are still very special to me. Over time, my priorities have changed, and I'm not able to see the Dead as often as I may like.

As I have stated before, one must go to a concert in order to capture the true meaning of the Dead experience, but perhaps I've shed some light on the subject.

It gives me so much pleasure to take people to their first concert and watch as they are bitten by the "Dead" bug.

Perhaps it is not for everyone, but I can make one promise: you will experience no other concert quite like it.

As stated in the unofficial motto of Dead heads, "there is nothing like a Grateful Dead concert."

Lawmaker confronts military over duplicate operations and weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) Missouri Rep. Ike Skelton, in his new job as a subcommittee chairman, is preparing to tackle an assignment that won't make him a popular figure among the nation's military leaders.

Skelton, a Lexington Democrat, plans to look for ways to streamline the military by eliminating duplicate operations and weapons in the four branches of the armed services.

"With changes in military technology, changes in the threats of the world ... it's going to have to be looked at," Skelton said.

To begin the task, Skelton is scheduling hearings on the issue before the House Armed Services subcommittee on military forces and personnel, of which he became chairman this year.

Among the questions Skelton will be asking: Whether the Air Force and Navy need separate but similar fighter aircraft? Do the Air Force, Navy and Marines all need their own jet fighter wings and can some be eliminated? Why does each of those services, including the Army, have its own medical corps, chaplain corps and legal departments? Can the services combine helicopter training programs?

"All of these will cause real disagreement. But I think we owe it to the country and to the military itself to make them ask the tough questions of themselves," Skelton said.

A key factor driving the debate is the nation's budget deficit. The White House and Congress are looking for ways to reduce federal spending, and the $270 billion defense budget is a tempting target.

"That's always the Damocles sword hanging over you - the budget-cutters," Skelton said. "The people that feel that now the Cold War is over, 'Let's bring the boys home and forget about the rest of the world.' There are some people who would really want to do that. They see the defense budget as a cash cow for domestic programs."

Not Skelton. He's traditionally an ally of the Pentagon and repeatedly has warned against too deeply cutting military forces in the wake of the breakup of the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact.

Skelton wants Congress and the Pentagon to systematically review military roles and missions and determine how best to modernize and streamline the armed forces - eliminating duplication when possible.

Skelton isn't acting alone, however.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the influential chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has been pushing the military since last year to eliminate its "tremendous redundancy and duplication." Nunn delivered an speech on the Senate floor last July calling for a "no-holds-barred, everything-on-the-table review" of military functions.

Skelton says the basic assignments of the armed services haven't changed fundamentally since 1948, although national security threats have changed and new technologies has greatly altered the military's weapons.

Any streamlining of the military could have a big effect in Missouri and other states. For example, the Navy is moving ahead with a new version of the F-18 fighter, which is built by the McDonnell Douglas Corp. in St. Louis, at the same time the Air Force wants to develop a new multirole fighter to replace the F-16, which is built by General Dynamics.

Skelton has suggested the Air Force also might be able to use the F-18.

Another part of the debate is establishing a "base force" of the military - the numbers of active duty forces as well as National Guard and Reserve troops. Resolving that will determine how many Guard units will be maintained in each state, including Missouri, and how the reserve forces will be activated in time of war.

Skelton says it's possible Congress will be forced to impose changes on the Pentagon through legislation if military officials resist all streamlining efforts.

He suggests some duplication could be relatively easy to eliminate. For example, he points to the separate education and training programs for each service's legal, chaplain and medical corps.

The most difficult issues will be those causing big reductions in spending and cutbacks in personnel for any branch of service, Skelton says. Among those areas of duplication: Expeditionary ground forces, such as light infantry divisions of the Army and Marines; air defenses, and "close air support" of combat troops.

Gen. Colin L. Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, reportedly rejects the notion current duplication is wasteful. Powell is to issue a report soon on military roles and missions.

According to The Washington Post, a final draft of the report contends duplicate capabilities in the services are "complementary." An earlier draft had recommended eliminating some duplication, but all of those proposals were dropped in the final version because of opposition from top military leaders, The Post reported last month.

Skelton isn't surprised by the military's reaction. He recalls that the military resisted a reorganization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff operations Congress implemented in 1986.

"Needless to say there is always parochialism between the four services," Skelton said. "This is not an easy task. It's painful."

Valentine sets stage for marriage proposals

By Judith A. Weller
Staff Writer

How many college women are walking around campus with a diamond ring on the third finger of their left hand? It may be more than some think.

Marriage is not something most college students have on their minds as they plan to graduate. It may be thought of as something that will happen in the future, after having the time to establish themselves in a career.

There are a few students who have come back from summer or winter break, however, with plans to "tie the knot."

With Valentine's Day coming up, more students may join the ranks, and start making plans for the "big day."

Many proposals are made around a special holiday, and there is no written rule on who can do the proposing.

Women have asked men to marry them, but most couples go the traditional way, where the man asks the woman.

The old "on bended knee" routine is really cute, but others have been more original, such as by burying the ring in a huge box under a couple layers of crumpled newspapers, or giving her flowers and/or balloons with the ring tied to the ribbon.

Some have a waiter bring an empty ring box out on a plate as one of the courses, and after getting yelled at, pull the ring out of a pocket.

Publicly asking, with the help of a scoreboard at baseball, basketball, or football game, or giving clues (as in a seek and find game) as to where a special present can be found are also some of the more innovative methods of proposing.

So, women, let your boyfriends know you want to be asked in a unique way (or men, do so to that special woman in your life), and potential proposers - try to think of an original and creative way to ask your love to marry you.

For those who have not thought about getting married, you are not alone. In a survey printed by U.S. News and World Report in 1989, out of twenty-one hundred full or part-time students 26.9% of men and 42.8% of women said they plan to get married between the ages of 21-24.

The average age for a woman to get married, according to one national magazine, is 23, while the average age for a man is close to 26. Most traditional college students have graduated and been out in the world by these ages.

For those who are not in the majority and are planning to get married right out of college, good luck in all the planning and preparation.

Remember to give yourself enough time to meet with all those important people—the preacher/justice of the peace, the florist, the caterer, the director of the reception hall, the printer, the cake maker, the tuxedo dealer, the seamstress, and all the other people who make "the big day" one to cherish and enjoy!

Student newspaper publishes photo of nude man in arts section

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) A columnist quit and dozens of readers called the University of New Mexico's student newspaper after it published a photo of a nude man in the arts section.

"We had more than 50 calls yesterday and at least a dozen this morning," Liz Sagrestano, office and classified advertising manager for The New Mexico Daily Lobo, said Friday.

Arthur Delgado, The Lobo's student editor, said he had received about 50 calls since Thursday's edition of the Lobo's arts section, "Detour," hit the streets. However, Delgado said most concerned a photo essay of a gay couple appearing in the same issue.

The nude photo was part of a story about the current fad and history behind piercing different body parts. It featured a full frontal nude photograph of a man with a surgical stud in his penis.

"We didn't do it simply because we could do it," Delgado said. "We knew there would probably be a fast and furious reaction, but I don't think journalists should shy away from an issue just because it may offend someone. If we did that, we wouldn't print 90 percent of our news."

Not all staff members agreed.

"I'm insulted and disgusted with the pornography in The Lobo," wrote Kyla Christoffersen in a column published Friday. "Therefore I can no longer continue contributing to The Daily Lobo as a columnist."

The Lobo has a circulation of about 14,500, mostly on the UNM campus. It has no faculty supervisor.

"The department has no control over the newspaper, never has and never will, I hope," said Fred Bales, former dean of the communications and journalism department. "The photo is too much for the story and sensationalizes it, but I would defend to the death the right of the editors to do this."

Delgado said most of the calls protesting the photo essay on the gay couple resulted from a photo shot through a keyhole that showed the two men in bed, about to kiss. Delgado said that photo showed "no nudity at all."

Editor, Rotunda:

It is about time that someone had the guts to speak up and say the truth about how the college is so darned greek skewed that it's actually possible for non greeks to be considered non students.

Sure, you can say some "good" things about greeks - especially if you look deep enough! The truth be known, the greek system encourages its members to develop into snotty-nosed prudes whose only purpose is themselves. Several fellow students who buy (and I do mean $$) into this system have become so brain-washed that they actually consider non-greeks less worthy of friendship than themselves. Its almost like an elite subcommunity within the college community. And unfortunately you hit the nail on the head when you said that the college invests more in the greek community than in the general student body.

The college is totally at fault for this dual standard. And budgeting for a greek publicist (who is himself an arrogant snob with no regard for the opinions and feelings of others) is an example of this. Has no one taught him that he can't just trample over folks he considers "not useful" while sucking up to those who benefit "his cause?" Way to go, Longwood - by spending everyone's money on a person who benefits a few selected pets and setting him up as a role model for behavior from the greeks, you've set another low water mark as standards go.

Snobbery, isolation and elitism are not what Longwood should stand for. Bravo, Rotunda, for being so bold in your last editorial - I bet there are a hundred anti-Rotunda letters this week, all from the same mindless but organized special group!

For obvious reasons, please do not print my name with this letter.

Tolerance and Jesus out the window

Editor, Rotunda:

As I watch CNN this Thursday afternoon (February 4), I hear that a Midwestern high school principal will be required by a federal judge to remove a portrait of Jesus from the front of his office. Apparently, a senior at the high school thought that the painting conveyed the idea that the school supported Christianity, something that this high-minded society simply cannot tolerate. After all, any man who preached civility, kindness, humility, and frugality is certainly too subversive for our impressionable youth. So, the student retained a lawyer from the American Civil Liberties Union, that great guardian of American freedom, and filed a lawsuit. The judge in the case agreed that the painting violated the First Amendment and "Separation of Church and State" doctrine.

Let's consider this problem from a couple of viewpoints. First, let's have a look at the First Amendment:

Congress (and the states) shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people to peaceably assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

There is nothing in the high school case that restricts establishment, exercise, speech, press, assembly, or redress on the part of anyone. No one was required to stop and admire or worship the painting, which, by the way, is of significant historical and artistic value. The principal obviously admired the painting or who it portrayed. I dare say that if the frame contained a picture of Mapplethorpe's "Piss Christ," the ACLU would not have acted as quickly.

The separation of church and state doctrine, as I understand it, was adopted by this nation in its infancy to prevent the rise of a tyrannical state religion, which everyone would be required to profess. I support that policy; most everyone does. In the past decade or so, however, the liberal left has used this policy to clean all property of anything associated with this country's "poisonous" Judao-Christian heritage. Let me remind these enlightened individuals that our legislators, then and now, open every session with prayer, although I'm sure the ACLU is trying to have this found unconstitutional.

As an agnostic, I have no real personal convictions as to Jesus or any other deity. However, I am disturbed when people use the Constitution to corrupt the values that the very same Constitution was designed to protect; all in the name of civil liberty. It is pure folly for a group of people, who have no real answers for society's woes, to remove one of the moral resins that hold's their society together

Appreciation extented to concert volunteers

Editor, Rotunda:

On behalf of the Longwood students that participate in the college music ensembles and as Chair of the Music Department, I want to extend appreciation to all of the people that made the Roy Clark benefit concerts a reality.

I was overwhelmed with the amount of energy and effort put forth by administration, faculty, staff and students that in four weeks produced two benefit concerts for the Music Department. It proved to me that once again this campus is made up of hard working people that are genuine in their efforts to help students.

Of the many examples of how hard people worked to put this concert on, I will tell you of one particular example.

Beginning on Wednesday, February, 3, William Lynn worked forty hours straight with only a short one hour rest. That one hour of rest was around four in the morning in Lancer Hall using the construction stage as a bed and a speaker cover for a pillow.

The entire effort from the start was done to benefit students, in particular, students that perform in the Music Department ensembles. The efforts of many will result in helping to develop more off-campus performances.

There are too many people to thank in one letter by name, but I will mention a few, namely Lou Markwith, Franklin Grant, William Lynn, Joan Mason, Tal Yeatts, the Physical Plant crew, the set-up and strike crews made up of Longwood students, and of course, Roy Clark.

I also want to thank the students that cooperated in moving their cars to make ample parking available for the concert patrons.

Please realize that this was necessary and that by doing so you were contributing to the success of the concerts, which in essence resulted in helping your fellow students.

I hope all who attended enjoyed the talents of Mr. Clark and appreciated the hard work it took to develop such an event in such a short amount of time.

Dr. Don Trott

Longwood equals last season's victory total

Lancers spear Bobcats 72-63

Junior Charles (Soup) Brown had his best offensive showing in a month Monday night, leading the Longwood men's basketball team to a 72-63 victory over West Virginia Wesleyan in Lancer Hall.

The win, LC's 10th in its last 12 games, gives the Lancers a 14-8 record and equals last season's victory total. The Lancers bounced back strong from a 90-80 loss at Wofford Saturday night which stopped a five-game win streak.

Brown, Longwood's top scorer for the season, had seen his average fall since he suffered an ankle injury back in January. Monday night, he hit seven of eight shots from the floor and scored 16 points. His total could have been higher but he hit just two of seven free throws.

Matt Watkins scored five points and Brown four as the Lancers used a 15-2 first half surge to take command of the game. Trailing 21-16 with 7:39 left until intermission, Longwood got several easy baskets after steals and went up 31-23 as Watkins canned a 3-pointer with 3:47 left in the half. West Virginia Wesleyan, which trailed 36-28 at the half, was unable to overtake Longwood the rest of the way.

"I thought we a had a lot better effort than we did at Wofford," said Lancer coach Ron Carr. "We played with emotion and intensity. It was a rough, physical game, and our effort came at the right time."

Bryan Weaver recorded his third double in points and rebounds in the last four games. He totaled 13 points and 10 boards. Michael Druitt, Watkins and Adam Huffman scored eight points each, while Chuck Laster and Benji Webb had nine each. Druitt added six rebounds and five assists while Huffman also had six caroms.

Longwood shot an amazing 60.1 percent from the floor (24-40), but made just 23-40 from the foul line (58.1 percent).

"I think the reason we shot so well was that we created some easy shots with our defense," said Carr. "We did a good job of forcing turnovers."

For West Virginia Wesleyan, now 7-13 for the season, sharpshooter Kenny Smith finished with 23 points. He banged in five of nine shots from 3-point territory.

With five games still to play, the Lancers have clinched their first winning season since the 1988-89 squad finished 20-7. Longwood will be on the road for four of those final five contests. The Lancers' last home tilt of the season will be Saturday, Feb. 20 when Ferrum visits for a 2:00 contest.

Longwood won't play again this week until Saturday when the Lancers visit Queens in Charlotte, N.C. for a 2:00 contest. The Royals had won 11 in a row heading into two games in Alaska last Friday and Saturday. Longwood handed Queens a stunning 94-73 defeat Jan. 4 in Lancer Hall.

Wofford Clips Lancers 90-80

In the Lancers 90-80 loss in Spartanburg, S.C. Saturday night, Longwood fell behind 35-28 at the half and trailed by as many as 16 points in the second half. The 10-8 Terriers shot 56.1 percent from the floor and got 30 points from junior Matt Allen. Coming into the contest, Allen was averaging 7.8 ppg.. Wofford is the only team to score more than 72 points on the Lancers since Division I Marshall beat LC 101-86 back in December.

Benji Webb

Lancer coach Ron Carr was disappointed with his team's play on defense. The defeat ended a five-game Longwood win streak.

Leading the way at Wofford was Weaver with 17 points and eight rebounds. Weaver has been the Lancer scoring leader in seven of the last nine games. Other major contributors were Webb (12 pts., 6 reb.), Laster (11 pts., 7 reb.) and Brown (11 pts., 6 reb.).

Druitt chipped in with seven points, five rebounds and five assists, and freshman DeVonne Johnson hit three of five 3-point bombs for a new career-high of nine points.

Webb jewel of the future

By Brendan McEvoy
Sports Editor

He stands at 6 feet 6 inches tall and weighs in at a slim 205 pounds. Rather intimidating for a basketball player. Yet his Magic Johnson-like smile and charming personality will help you remember that Benji Webb is just one of the guys.

As a young boy, he lived in England where he played soccer. When he moved to the United States, his father forced him to play basketball. Eventually, he picked up the game and found that he could be one of the best.

Webb played basketball at Tabb High School in Yorktown, Virginia. He was a four year high school varsity letterman. He also played in the state tournament his freshman year with another Tabb High School great, Terry Kirby (University of Virginia football player).

Webb's most memorable high school basketball experience was during his senior year when he scored his 1,000th point. They stopped the game to give him the ball, and he threw it to his father who was sitting in the stands.

Besides Longwood, Webb was recruited during his senior year by the University of Virginia and Wake Forest University as well. As a high school center, Webb has had to adjust to being a small forward and a shooting guard. He said, "...the players are much bigger and I get shoved around a lot."

Since he's been here at Longwood, the coaches have had a big influence on him. Webb says that the coaches want you to work hard no matter who you are. Webb points out that junior Charles Brown has also been a key influence on him. "He's got a lot of talent," said Brown, "and all I've tried to do is give him confidence. He puts the ball on the floor really well for a man his size, and no one hits the offensive boards like him."

When Longwood defeated Pfeiffer College (72-68), who at that time was ranked 3rd in NAIA Top 20, they not only beat a nationally ranked team, they ended Pfeiffer's home game winning streak. Webb's 10 points and 9 rebounds were key ingredients to Longwood's upset victory. Webb said, "That feeling [of beating Pfeiffer] was one of the best feelings in my life. It was right up there with playing in the state tournament my freshman year [in high school]."

Webb is currently averaging 7.2 points per game and has the team's best field goal percentage hitting 53.7% percent of his shots. As a starter, he's averaging 11.7 points per game and 6.1 rebounds per game. He's the team's third leading rebounder and has been the leading scorer in four games this season. Webb has started in six games and played in all twenty-two.

More importantly, Webb is a student-athlete. Last semester he had one of the highest grade point averages on the team with a 3.2. Webb is an art major, and he said if a professional basketball career isn't possible, he'd like to live in a big city working in commercial art.

Benji Webb is a very poised individual both on and off the court. He displays grace under pressure and his intimidating presence is felt the second he steps on the floor. Off the floor his charming presence is felt the second he steps on the floor. Off the floor his charming presence is felt when he steps in the room. He's truly a unique individual.

Lancer wrestlers claim four-individual titles

Longwood second in state meet

While Norfolk State won the team title at Sunday's Virginia College Division Wrestling Championships, Longwood also fared well in the competition with four individual state champions and a runner-up finish in the team standings.

Norfolk State won with a total of 73.25 points, followed by Longwood with a total of 63 points, Newport News Apprentice with 54.75 points and Washington & Lee with 35 points.

Longwood, which is 6-13 in dual meets this year, had four individual state champions, led by senior Brian Jones. Jones went 2-0 on his way to a winning the 150 pound weight class with a 7-2 decision in the finals.

Also winning state titles for Longwood were freshman Stuart Chung, who is ranked first in the southeast region. Chung won the 126 pound class with an 11-2 decision in his finals matchup. Bryan Hartley at 158 also won his finals match with a 13-6 decision over his opponent and Mark Helberg, who is also ranked first in the southeast region in the 177 pound class, won his weight class by going 2-0 on the day with two pins.

"It was a good tournament, and I am very pleased with the way we wrestled today," commented coach Steve Nelson. "We entered eight wrestlers in the tournament, and all eight placed. We gave them a run for their money, but we came up just short against a very talented Norfolk State team."

Also wrestling for Longwood, and all placing third were Joey Hearl at 118, Dave Franklin at 167, James Mauldin at 190 and Brent Newell at heavyweight.

In action from Friday night, Longwood hosted the NCAA Division II's number six team in the University of Pittsburgh-Johnstown. The experience of the Mountain Cats showed up with a 51-0 decision over Longwood.

The Mountain Cats brought four wrestlers ranked in the Division II's top ten, along with three other wrestlers that have qualified for nationals in the past.

Current records for the Lancers are; Helberg at 20-9, Chung 18-11, sophomore Joe Silvus (Mathews-who is injured and missed this weekend's action), 17-10 at 142, Jones 11-9, Hartley 11-12, Newell 11-13, junior Keith Goff, 10-10 at 142/150, Hearl 7-11, Franklin 7-12, and Mauldin 5-10.

Longwood will host Washington & Lee University Thursday night at 7:30 in Lancer Hall before travelling to Pembroke State (N.C.) University on Feb. 21 for the NCAA Division II Southeast Regional Tournament.

Lady Lancers split pair of games: Now 6-14

Longwood's women's basketball team split two games last week, first snapping a seven-game losing skid with a 79-74 win at Columbia Union Wednesday before dropping a 97-61 decision to nationally-ranked Pittsburgh-Johnstown on Saturday in Lancer Hall. The Lady Lancers will take a record of 6-14 into Thursday's contest with intrastate rival Virginia State in Petersburg beginning at 5:30.

In Takoma Park, Md., Longwood overcame adverse playing conditions to defeat Columbia Union College. Sparked by junior Ana Litton and sophomore Kirsten Hillgaard, who combined for 55 points and 24 rebounds, the Lady Lancers put a halt to their seven-game losing streak while dropping CUC to 15-8.

"It was an outstanding team effort," commented Coach Duncan. "Our team defense was very good and we did a great job of rebounding.

Against the University of Pittsburgh-Johnstown on Saturday, Longwood played the NCAA Division II 10th-ranked Lady Mountain Cats tough early before being blitzed by the visitors' tenacious defense and fundamentally sound brand of basketball. UPJ forced 27 turnovers (19 in the first half), outrebounded LC 50-38 and shot 52 percent (44-84) from the field to LC's 37 percent (25-68).

Following Thursday's game with Virginia State, Longwood returns to Lancer Hall for a 3:00 contest with Queens (N.C.) College on Saturday afternoon.

Anti-greek propaganda festoons campus

By David Adcock
Rotunda Staff

•Anti-greek propaganda is prominent on campus. Some students feel that it promotes individuality, but many others disapprove. And one social greek organization is fighting back.

Covering the walls of campus in a multicolored display are fliers of all kinds reminding us of events, publicizing groups and clubs, and advertising services.

Recently, however, some students have been swathing the campus in anti-greek propaganda and vandalism.

For instance, scrawled upon the walls of South Cunningham last semester were the words "Practice discrimination... go greek!"

And beginning last semester, anti-greek fliers were placed near Dean of Student-approved rush fliers.

Some of these fliers appear to have the stamp of the Dean of Students Office's approval, but close examination of the two of the fliers seems to show that they are a combination of legitimate fliers and tricky photo copying.

Segments of old fliers were covered by white paper and copied. Then the unapproved information was interjected and the newly made flier was copied to produce what was seen on the walls. One flier seems to be an original.

The Office of Greek Affairs sees all three of these fliers as illegal and is awaiting the identity of the culprit(s). However, unless they are caught in the act it is not likely that anyone will discover their identity.

This reporter did see one flier being placed by a female student, who asked to remain anonymous. According to this student and the Office of Student Affairs, that particular flier was approved.

According to the creator of the flier, one reason for the fliers is fun. "I don't know which is more fun, making the fliers, or observing people's reaction to them."

While discussing the topic of anti-greek attitudes and propaganda, the creator of the approved flier, as well as other students present, professed similar views on the subject of greeks. They felt that greeks were both discriminatory. In addition, they did not like people to tell them how to dress or how to act.

One of the individuals interviewed had first-hand experience with greek life. As a result of her individuality, she said she was made to feel like an outcast and now is much more satisfied as a non-greek.

Those interviewed, despite their own anti-greek perspective, were not against those who did choose to join a social greek organization. The main purpose of the fourth flyer is to promote individuality.

The creator of this particular flier plans to continue to do so, and made it clear that all future fliers would be legal.

The identity of the creator(s) of the other illegal fliers are still unknown.

Some students feel that Longwood College will not tolerate illegal propaganda, and if caught, that the creators of unapproved fliers should appear before the Judicial Board.

One social greek organization is combating the anti-greek propaganda with fliers of their own.

These fliers feature a copy of one of the numerous stickers which have appeared on campus that sport the slogan "Go greek, buy a personality."

This social greek organization, Tau Kappa Epsilon (TKE), responded "If you already have a personality and you are serious about finding out what a REAL greek organization is like, [TKE] is having an open house... ."

Benefit concert sparks student protest

By Heather Moulin
Rotunda Staff

• Almost $10,000 was raised by Roy Clark benefit concert, but students petition against parking restriction.

On Thursday Feb. 4th, a benefit concert was given by country music singer Roy Clark in Lancer Hall. The purpose of this benefit concert was to create an endowment fund to provide travel funds for Longwood's Music ensemble performing groups. Almost $10,000 was raised.

The concert drew a crowd of some 2,000 fans. Because of the large number of concert-goers expected, the faculty and administration (including the President's office and the Dean of Student's office), had a difficult decision to make and only a short amount of time to make it in as to parking arrangements. The college was notified only four weeks prior to the concert of the date.

Longwood decided to solve the problem by asking everyone who normally parked their cars in the lots surrounding Lancer Hall to move them the day before the concert.

This caused a considerable amount of controversy among the student body, a number of whom as a whole believe that they should not have to move their cars when they pay to park on campus. As a result of this, a petition with 500 signatures was turned in to Dr. Doyle.

Despite student resistance, most of the cars were moved out of the Lancer Hall lots the day before the concert. This was considered a great achievement and commendable act by the student body by the Director of Planned Giving, Franklin Grant. He greatly appreciated the college-wide effort.

Two students were awarded $50 prizes for moving their cars. The two students who received the prizes through a raffle drawing were Tammy Owen and Shara James.

BYOB policy questioned by some

By David Adcock
Rotunda Staff

• The BYOB Policy, as promoted by GAMMA, sets guidelines for social activities on campus. Some students, however, don't agree with the new rules.

Rules affecting student life seem to be everywhere. One such rule that concerns all students, especcially greeks, is the Bring Your Own Beverage, or BYOB, policy. The policy has come about due to a new organization called Gamma.

Gamma is made up of as many as three representatives from every fraternity and sorority on campus. The group's purpose is to discuss and promote the policies of the college.

Their first task was to help clarify the BYOB policy.

For example, any infractions occurring during a party will be the responsibility of the host. Gamma recently hosted a party in order to make clear exactly what the BYOB policy means.

Other aspects of the BYOB policy are that: a party is not to last more than six hours, all students attending must be on the guest list (with only a very few exceptions), and that this list must not exceed more than one hundred and fifty people.

The amount of alcohol to be consumed by each person is also covered in the BYOB policy.

For example, when a person attends a party for all six hours, he or she is allowed to drink a six pack of beer. If the person is only there for three hours, only three beers are allowed, and so on.

When the individual arrives at the party, they are greeted by the door checker, who will take their beer to the bartender.

They will then be given a ticket with holes equal to the number of beers punched out of it.

There will be a number on the card that must correspond with the number written on the hand of the person who owns the beer.

Some students, however, disagree with portions the BYOB policy.

One qualm expressed is that college is supposed to be a testing ground for the real world, yet students are treated as if alcohol is not a reality. Others contest the rulings on party guest lists.

One student said "in the real world we must control our intake of alcohol on our own. Here at Longwood we are all under the control of a third parent. If something is not done, this parent will become more and more strict until we would rather live at home with the other two."

76 students apply for R.A. positions

R.A. selection process already underway

By Mindy Oakes
Rotunda Staff

• Resident Assistant selection has already begun, with 75 applicants trying for 26 open positions.

Rumor has it that the tacit qualifications for Resident Assistant (R.A.) have been modified.

The R.A. application process, which has already begun, had its first round during February 6th and 7th.

The opening session of R.A. selection consisted of a brief overview on what exactly a R.A. is expected to know and do.

In addition, two workshops were held. The subject of the first workshop was diversity was discussed, and the second R.A. workshop dealt mainly with assertiveness.

Approximately 75 applicants showed up for these sessions, but only 26 Resident Assistant positions were open.

Some of the applicants seemed to be somewhat daunted by the rumor that the selection committee is now moving away from the "over-involved" student usually focused on and concentrating more on individuals with good leadership qualities, responsiblity, and dedication.

The second portion of the application process began after Wednesday, February 10th, when all the applicants are notified about their status.

Personal interviews with staff members that are assigned to each chosen individual will then follow.

PERSPECTIVES

Lots of civility fluff, but no substance

Surprise, folks! Its Civility Week again! That wonderful (but brief) period of time when the college tries to focus on celebrating diversity, politeness and cultural sensitivity. (For those of you who care, don't worry, you wont hear about this for the rest of the year...).

Yes, our administrators will have done their jobs, padding their annual reports and showing glorified versions of having fulfilled their major goals for the year. After that is done, its back to business as usual - why bother with doing what was preached during a mere week?

For those who suffered through numerous speakers urging students to challenge the status quo in the interest of multiculturalism and reducing inequalities, Longwood's continued disregard for what they preach puzzles us. How can Longwood expect students and student groups to be more inclusive while in practice, Longwood role-models the opposite behavior?

Here are some suggestions and observations for our friends in Ruffner:

1. Forget padding your annual reports. Affirmative action should exist at all levels of the organization - there is no point in hiring more minority staff at the ARA dishwasher level, while excluding them at the director level.

For example, the division of Student Affairs (which oversees the Civility Week program) hired nine staff members within the last year at the director/assistant director level. None of these were minorities, and thus Student Affairs continues to operate with no minority staff reporting to the Vice President.

The other administrative divisions seem to be no different, and unfortunately, neither are most of the major faculty positions. Longwood continues to be a lily-white educational institution, despite proclaiming itself as the champion of civility.

2. Now take a look at our student body. There is almost no real student diversity in the student body. And what about Longwood student leaders? OK, we've all seen the posters trumpeting the fact that Longwood had a black student serving as SGA President for 2 consecutive years. But take a look at our student leaders and the student body as a whole - its hardly a smorgasbord of cross-cultural, multi-ethnic diversity. And its not what most people who know what they are talking about think of when using the term "total education."

Located in a multi-ethnic area in which Longwood is the only state school that has responsibility for educational opportunities, it is remarkable that most of our students come from the Chesapeake Bay and Northern Virginia suburbs. Come on Longwood, bring in some exciting, vivacious, diverse students so that the educational opportunities for all are enhanced by the exposure to a real learning experience.

3. For those of you who so readily can spout off the names of a few minority staff, faculty and students, ask them if they really feel comfortable and happy, or do they simply feel threatened and are seen as threatening because of their "difference."

In reality, the comfort level at Longwood is quite low, and unfortunately, some of our administrators don't care, or won't admit this. Minority staff are not presented as being special, just different. Minority faculty are not seen at a senior faculty level. Some minority students are verbally harassed by other students and many are constantly reminded of their difference and inferiority.

Longwood needs to examine what picture it portrays in its noble quest for civility. How does it hire staff and faculty, and are they happy after getting here? How diverse is the student body? What are the subtle messages Longwood sends out? These are more important than mere programs that serve only to pad people's annual reports.

And a final question — why do we have a Cultural Unification Committee in Lancer Productions? Whose culture do we wish to unify? Can't we just celebrate and accept different cultures rather than changing them?

No culture wishes to be absorbed into the mainstream, or unified by others — that was the whole point of the Black Power movement in the '60s. Or did Longwood slip past that time period without learning anything?

Multiculteralism and and civility truly are noble goals - every person who wishes to have a place in our society should do everything possible to promote these ideas.

But even more vital than the promotion of these ideas is the practice of them.

Longwood's feeble lip service to such lofty ideals makes a mockery of them and robs them of the power they should hold.

So until Longwood is willing to implement a more radical recruitment plan, both on the administrative and student level, to bring in a more diverse population, and then bolster these attempts by greatly increasing the comfort level on campus for minorities, they should stop patting themselves on the back and get to work.

Professor asks about students

Editor, Rotunda:

"Where Are All Of The Professors," (Rotunda, 2/3/93) Carol Semones inquires. I have an equally perplexing question: "Where are all of the students?" Exactly where are all of the students on Friday afternoons—you know, the "F" in a "MWF" class? For that matter, where are the students in the morning of any class? Where are all the students two days before a college recognized holiday?

Where are all of the students who actually read assignments before class? I gave a quiz in a class this week and only 2 students showed any evidence having opened the book. Where are all of the students the day a term paper is due? Where are all of the students who actually know that a "term paper" is supposed to be worked on for the entire "term"?

No, Ms. Semones, students are not what "college is all about." College is about learning. This process requires two elements: teachers who work hard at teaching, and students who work hard to learn.

Where are all of the professors? Well, we could be in the library researching a lecture for a class many students never attend. This is the perfect hiding place for professors, as the library is frequented so seldom by students at any time except the last week of the semester.

We could be attending a committee meeting. You students surely understand the importance of meetings. I always have several students each semester who "have to" leave an evening class over an hour early to attend an urgent meeting of a social organization. Students often explain that if they miss the meeting they will be "fined." Professors get "fined" fairly stiff penalties for failing to participate in the committee life of this campus: we could be denied tenure.

We could be grading papers at some undisclosed location. Several professors I know grade in the Wal-Mart parking lot or the town cemetery so they will not be distracted by visitors or phone calls during this laborious task.

We could have given up hope that any student would actually take advantage of the office hours we provide—after semesters or years of sitting completely uninterrupted during office hours—and headed home in despair.

Or we could be doing exactly what you students do when you skip class.

Sincerely,
Lee D. Millar Bidwell, Ph.D.

Editorial 'unfair to the greek system'

Editor, Rotunda:

I feel that the editorial in the February 3, 1993's issue was very unfair to the Greek system. Four national sororities were founded on Longwood's campus and therefore should be recognized. The tables in the dining hall are for everyone to sit at. We do not make anyone get up and move. For the leadership positions, we, as greeks, are encouraged to take a risk and run for these positions (these positions are voted on by the entire student body, not just greek organizations). Every sorority and fraternity has a minimum grade point average that must be maintained. If they are not maintained, penalties are rewarded. Every room on campus has a telephone in it, and as our chapter rooms are rooms, the numbers are included in the book. As for being compared to the "Hitler Youth", that goes way beyond the line. My sorority has helped me to grow as a person and has also been a very good support system for me.

Growing numbers choose to say no

Celibacy: The choice of a new generation?

By Dana Kennedy
AP Columnist

Ten or 15 years ago this full-page ad in the Wichita (Kan.) Eagle may have seemed ludicrous:

"IN DEFENSE OF A LITTLE VIRGINITY," read the banner headline over a lengthy plea for abstinence among teen-agers.

Not surprisingly, the ad last October was paid for by the Kansas Family Research Institute, a conservative think tank in America's heartland.

But just two months later, another plea for teaching kids abstinence appeared in The New York Times. This time it was in the form of an article written by a contributing editor at Rolling Stone magazine.

Under the headline "Sex is for Adults," Ellen Hopkins, 35, wrote, "I once thought I'd tell my young son that anything goes - so long as he used condoms. Now I'm not so sure. Not only do I want my son to live, I don't want him to miss out on longing - longing for what he isn't yet ready to have."

As the AIDS plague spreads across the American landscape, there are signs that more and more teen-agers and adults are choosing a new kind of chastity.

That's not to say sex is on the way out. But in an era where a magazine like Going Bonkers features a cover story titled "The Joy of No Sex," experts say abstinence, or at least caution, is no longer looked at as solely the province of priests, nuns and spinsters.

More than 500,000 people responded to a booklet offered by the Kansas Family Research Institute in its newspaper ad, said executive director David Payne.

"I think it's just pretty good common sense," Payne says. "I grew up in an era of sexual revolution. But the reasonable person can evaluate the whole gamut of health risks involved in a promiscuous lifestyle. It's just not worth the risk."

In the decade since AIDS has transmogrified from a fringe gay epidemic into a potential heterosexual plague, the nation's sexual attitudes have slowly shifted in response.

Family and sex therapists around the country report a growing number of men and women are choosing to remain celibate in between serious relationships rather than engage in recreational sex.

"We used to think the most intense sex was between two strangers," says Dr. David Schnarch, a New Orleans marriage and sex therapist.

"Remember when Erica Jong published 'Fear of Flying?' That was the epitome of '60s sex. Now people see good sex as a function of personal development instead of technique. The novelty of sex with a stranger wears off quickly."

David Dismore, 46, a video archivist for feminist groups in Los Angeles, says, "I'm still a virgin and it's still a wonderful thing to be." Sex, he says, "is only special when you share it in a loving committed relationship."

Dismore has been a member of the National Chastity Association, a group which at one time claimed at least 400 members.

A recent study culled from data gathered by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services indicated that about 31 percent of unmarried women in a survey of 8,450 women have made one or more changes in their sexual behavior since hearing of AIDS.

Sixteen percent of the unmarried women reported reducing their number of sexual partners to one; 6 percent said they had stopped having intercourse entirely; 9 percent reduced their frequency of intercourse and 12 percent stopped having intercourse with men they did not know well.

But there are still a lot of sexually promiscuous people out there.

The percentage of sexually active teen-age girls who have had just one sexual partner has dropped by more than a third since 1971, while the figure for those having four or more partners has doubled, according to a new study released in December by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, a non-profit research group concerned with reproductive health.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta reported in late January that people involved in one AIDS risk study cut down on one-night stands and multiple sex partners after some celebrities announced they had the AIDS virus.

The CDC questioned 283 people at a clinic for sexually transmitted diseases in Montgomery County, Md., from July 29, 1991, through Feb. 14, 1992. The agency asked how often in the last three months each person had a one-time sexual encounter or had three or more sexual partners.

On Nov. 7, 1991, Magic Johnson, who played professional basketball with the Los Angeles Lakers, announced that he had HIV, the virus that causes AIDS. That happened to be the midpoint of the study.

Of the 185 people surveyed before Johnson's announcement, 31 percent reported having one-night stands in the previous three months and 32 percent reported three or more sexual partners, the CDC said.

After the announcement, 20 percent of the 97 people surveyed reported one-night stands and 21 percent reported three or more partners.

Experts say that people now have more choices about when, if and how they have sex.

Syndicated advice columnist Ann Landers reported in 1990 that a letter she printed from a couple in their late 50s who happily did without sex prompted 35,000 letters in response.

More than 65 percent of the couples older than 60 who wrote, and 75 percent of the couples over 70, said they had little or no sex and didn't miss it.

Experts said the fallout from AIDS has accompanied the aftershocks of the sexual revolution.

Fifteen years after the "Summer of Love," talk about keeping your virginity longer or choosing periods of celibacy is not just becoming more common. It's becoming more cool.

The cult rock singer Morrissey is almost as well-known for his brooding ballads as his decision to abstain from sex. In interviews, Morrissey usually refers to sex as if it were as exciting as a root canal.

Celebrities such as Kirk Cameron and Chelsea Noble, both of TV's "Growing Pains," Los Angeles Dodger pitcher Orel Hershiser, professional basketball star Kevin Johnson and Seattle Seahawks wide receiver Steve Largent all participated in a video called "Sex, Lies and the Truth," urging kids to abstain from sex.

Masturbation, like condoms, is enjoying such a revival that researchers at the Masters & Johnson Institute in St. Louis have given it a new, '90s name: "self-stimulation."

"Some people get freaked out over the big M word, masturbation," Young says. "So we now call it self-stimulation for perception's sake."

A much-discussed recent episode of NBC's "Seinfeld" revolved entirely around masturbation. Though the word was never used on the air, the plot involved a bet made among the four main characters about who could go the longest - not without having sex, without masturbating.

When Seinfeld and his pals checked in with each other, they would ask one another if they had remained "master of your domain."

Doctors, therapists and sociologists claim it's too easy to point to AIDS as the only reason people are curtailing their sex lives or teen-agers are choosing abstinence.

Many say that AIDS has given people a chance to rethink their choices in life. Some of the changes forced on society by AIDS - less promiscuity, for example - are beginning to be viewed as sensible, even desirable.

They also say that the post-feminist age has caused a sea change between the sexes. Women, for whom marrying well was once considered a major career move, no longer look at men as meal tickets.

"Don't forget that old line about women being told to marry a doctor," Young says. "Now they're being told to be a doctor and marry whoever the hell they want. People are finally looking at what they want out of their lives instead of going into a relationship based on economic or emotional dependence."

Being a little pickier may also mean going without for awhile.

Michael Jackson's contract to remain private

LOS ANGELES (AP) A judge ruled that Michael Jackson's top-secret recording contract will remain under wraps.

Sony and Jackson attorneys said that the contract was irrelevant to the lawsuit and that its release would throw the recording industry into chaos by inducing other pop stars to try to match Jackson's lucrative contract.

The judge instead ordered Sony to compile a list detailing the release dates of various recordings, or make the release agreements available.

Things are really looking up for you in the love department. If you are married, shower a bit more attention on your mate and you will be surprised at the effect it will create. If you are single, there seems to be potential loves turning every corner ... your smile is a magnet, and those attracted to you will definitely let you know. Don't jump to any hasty conclusions about someone special, you don't know everything. Maintain harmony at work.

Director optimistic about future

Spike Lee stresses the need for college education

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) Director Spike Lee has some advice for black college students: Finish your education.

Lee, director of "Do the Right Thing," "Malcolm X" and other films, told about 2,300 students at the University of Massachusetts to "Get a degree, get as much as you can, and get the hell out of Dodge."

Lee said that while black students still face racial barriers, they can draw strength from the battles of the past.

"Your parents or grandparents needed to be guarded by the National Guard in order to go to school," Lee said. "Compared to that, you've got it made."

He added: "African-American students can be more unified and need to be more unified. Draw strength from each other ... the history of our people is to make do with what you have and build on it. That's what we all need to do."

Lee was invited to speak Wednesday at the UMass campus, which has been the scene of racial unrest in recent months.

Students have protested a Sept. 25 attack on a black resident assistant by a white who allegedly punched him and hurled racial insults. The black dormitory monitor found racial epithets and feces in the hallway outside his room a week later.

Students have also complained there are not enough minority students at the school.

Referring to the unrest, Lee said, "I'm told there are 20,000 students on campus and 500 of them are African-American. Those numbers need to change."

Lee also said he was optimistic about the fledgling administration of President Clinton.

"I feel a lot better with Clinton as president," Lee said. "I'm disappointed he reneged on the Haitians, but I'm happy with his stance on gay issues."

He was referring to Clinton's original promise to reverse the Bush administration's policy of returning Haitian immigrants intercepted at sea to their homeland, rather than allowing them to apply for political asylum in the United States.

Clinton recently backtracked, saying he would stick with Bush's policy for the time being.

Lee was invited to the Amherst campus by the Afrik-Am Society.

Number of interracial couples increased in last 12 years

WASHINGTON (AP) The number of interracial couples in America nearly doubled in the past 12 years, and now more than one out of every 50 marriages crosses the boundaries of race, the government says.

There were 246,000 black-white couples last year, nearly four times the number in 1970, the Census Bureau said.

An additional 883,000 couples represented marriages between whites and other races, such as Asian, Pacific Islander or American Indian; 32,000 were between blacks and other races.

The Census Bureau also noted that there were 1.2 million marriages between Hispanics and other ethnic groups. That figure was not used in calculating the number of interracial couples, however.

The bureau counted only married couples, so the numbers do not account for interracial couples who haven't tied the knot.

It has been 26 years since the Supreme Court struck down all state laws outlawing mixed marriages.

But most the nation's 1,161,000 interracial couples find their lives aren't much different from everyone else's.

"Interracial marriages, biracial children, folks that date interracially it's a very normal thing," said Yvette of Oak Park, Mich.

"The biggest problem we have is paying off our credit cards," like many other families, said her husband, Daniel Hollis.

Walker said the couple occasionally runs into small acts of prejudice, such as a dirty look or a muttered racial slur.

"I think the problem is that people think interracial relationships are abnormal," Walker said. "A lot of people fear things they don't know."

Mixed-race couples have problems with the broader community because their marriages force people to discard stereotypes, said Maria P.P. Root, a Seattle clinical psychologist and author of the book, "Racially Mixed People in America."

"Interracial marriage makes it hard to know who is who and what to think about people," she said.

Black-white marriages are most likely to face prejudice, she said. "White-Hispanic or white-Asian you don't see the community uproar as much."

Freeze-dried pets on cutting edge of preservation technology

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) Your dog just died and you can't bring yourself to say goodbye.

Well, you can keep your pet for a long time to come if it's freeze-dried.

For a price, Joe Kulis, proprietor of Joe Kastaway Kulis Live Freeze Dried Bait in Bedford, a Cleveland suburb, will freeze your dogs for posterity.

Or your squirrel, pheasant, turkey, deer or horse.

Kulis' dog, Suzy, was displayed at the Columbus Sports, Vacation & Travel Show at the Ohio State Fairgrounds last week.

Freeze-drying is better than taxidermy because it preserves the subject better, said Harry Cunningham, who was overseeing Kulis' operation at the show. Freeze-dried game won't fade or deteriorate, he said.

The process is not new, Cunningham said, noting that Roy Rogers' horse, Trigger, ended up that way. But the process is becoming more popular.

"We do about 100 to 150 dogs every season," Cunningham said.

To freeze-dry an animal, it is placed in a giant vacuum tank. The process is similar to freeze-drying coffee, Cunningham said. You take what is provided by nature, freeze it and draw out the water.

Posing is important to the process for pets or trophies.

"The way you put him in is the way he comes out, and you can't change it," Cunningham said.

Trophy fish can be freeze-dried for about $4 an inch, Cunningham said. Larger animals cost proportionately more, and size is no object. Kulis has done elephants, giraffes and rhinoceros.

Clinton and Mitterrand discuss Bosnia

WASHINGTON (AP) President Clinton and French President Francois Mitterrand talked by telephone Monday about the new U.S. policy in Bosnia.

"President Mitterrand welcomed the U.S. approach," said White House communications director George Stephanopoulos said.

The Clinton administration last week named Reginald Bartholemew to serve as an envoy to cease-fire negotiations in Bosnia-Herzegovina and promised to help implement and enforce any settlement.

Clinton did not talk to Mitterrand about the policy last week because the French president was on a trip to Vietnam, Stephanopoulos said. Clinton and Mitterrand discussed Vietnam "very briefly, but the focus was on Bosnia," he said.

HOPI-NAVAJO LAND DISPUTE DEFIES SETTLEMENT AFTER 100 YEARS

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) Clarence Blackrock has lived all his 63 years in the Cactus Valley-Big Mountain community on the Hopi Indian Reservation. He considers it his home, his land, his heritage.

But Blackrock, like most of his neighbors, is a Navajo. And despite his strong religious and ancestral ties to the land, he will be forced off it unless Navajo and Hopi leaders settle their century-old dispute over use of the land.

More than three decades of legal battles among the tribes and the federal government appeared on the way to resolution in November when a federal mediator announced a settlement giving the Hopis $15 million and 500,000 acres of land off the present reservation.

But now the agreement appears to have collapsed under the weight of criticism from state and local government officials, white landowners, and outdoor enthusiasts and the Navajo families.

At issue are several hundred thousand acres of high desert in northeastern Arizona. It is rugged, inhospitable land, scorched by the sun in the summer, bitterly cold in the winter.

But Blackrock and the 250 or so Navajo families who occupy the land are unwilling to leave.

The latest proposed settlement, reached during months of secret negotiations, would give the Hopis $15 million from the federal treasury plus two ranches consisting of 500,000 acres of private, state and federal land south of the Grand Canyon.

In exchange, the Navajo families would be given 75-year leases on the Hopi land.

"If we are not careful today, some day our children will ask why we did not do the right thing," Blackrock said.

DeConcini, a member of the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, has suggested that some sort of lease-purchase agreement be worked out so the Navajos eventually would gain ownership of the land.

But the Hopis have made it clear they are unwilling to give up any of their land. The tribe already has lost 90 percent of its traditional land base "at the hands of the United States and the Navajo Nation," Masayesva says.

"A land exchange is off the table," Masayesva says. "We will not, I repeat, will never, ever give up any more land."

And while Masayesva contends the Hopis have no desire to forcibly relocate the Navajos, some members of his tribe believe that may be the only solution.

U.N. REPORT: DRUG ABUSE FALLS IN U.S. BUT GRIM WORLDWIDE

VIENNA, Austria (AP) Drug abuse is on the decline in the United States but its effects remain grim worldwide, with heroin and cocaine addiction a growing problem in several regions, a U.N. panel said today.

The International Narcotics Control Board, in its annual report, also noted wide differences in the number of intravenous drug users testing positive for the AIDS virus across Europe, according to country.

The 13-member panel's report found that drug abuse in the United States continued to decline. From 1988 to 1991, the number of abusers dropped from an estimated 14.5 million to 12.6 million. Yet cocaine use rose. In 1991, abusers were estimated at 1.9 million, compared to 1.6 million a year earlier. The abuse of crack, which had fallen as much as 50 percent since 1989, leveled off.

Canadian authorities seized increased amounts of heroin and cocaine in 1991. At 1.2 tons, cocaine confiscations were double that of the previous year.

The report noted wide disparities in the percentage of intravenous drug users testing positive for the HIV virus in Europe. For Britain, it was up to 5 percent; Germany, 20 percent; Netherlands 30 percent; Spain 40-60 percent; France 58 percent, and Italy 30-80 percent. The report did not provide comparable U.S. figures.

CAT DIES AFTER BEING USED BY YOUTHS AS HOCKEY PUCK

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) A cat was killed by youths who apparently used the animal as a hockey puck, authorities said.

Buffalo police said a caller reported that the youths were playing street hockey with the cat Sunday morning. When police arrived, the youths were gone, but officers found an injured cat.

The cat died by the time officials from the SPCA and the city animal shelter arrived, said Buffalo dog control officer Norm Filer.

"We get a lot of calls, but not these circumstances kids batting a cat around with hockey sticks," Filer said Monday.

SPCA spokeswoman Gina Browning Rummel said the city has a lot of stray cats and her agency receives many reports of cruelty. Last summer, the city had a rash of incidents in which stray cats were set on fire, she said.

"There are cats literally all over the place," she said. "They're more available to people who do things like this."

Demands entry of HIV-positive Haitians

Rev. Jackson threatens hunger strike

WASHINGTON (AP) The Rev. Jesse Jackson threatened Monday to organize a hunger strike in the United States unless the Clinton administration allows HIV-infected Haitians into this country.

Jackson, who began a personal hunger strike Sunday, emerged from a meeting with White House Chief of Staff Mack McLarty saying he supported Clinton's Haitian policy, but he wants action within a week.

He also met with Hillary Rodham Clinton and discussed his views on the nation's health care system - the focus of Mrs. Clinton's work in the west wing of the White House. Jackson came away impressed.

"It was a very good meeting in my judgment. She is sensitive to a broad range of concerns."

The civil right leader recently returned from the Guantanamo Navy base in Cuba, where he joined HIV-infected Haitians on a hunger strike to pressure Clinton to lift the ban on their entry.

He also urged Clinton to move faster to restore deposed Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide and end a naval blockade meant to discourage mass migration from the Caribbean nation.

"I'm going to continue (the hunger strike) for at least a week and if at end of the week there has been no shift of policy, I will have to consider expanding the number of people involved," Jackson said.

He said the expanded strike could involve "other leaders and other organizations that have been involved in the process."

Clinton said last week that he wants to reverse the immigration policy that bars HIV-infected people from entering the country. In an about-face of his campaign rhetoric, Clinton adopted President Bush's policy toward Haiti, sending monitors to the Caribbean nation to push for democracy.

"Mr. Clinton's policy toward Haiti is the right policy," Jackson said. But he said the administration needs prodding to "implement that policy early on."

The 267 Haitians being detained at this U.S. military base are seeking asylum, but have been refused entry to the United States because they or relatives with them have AIDS or are infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS. Most of the Haitians are refusing their meals to some degree, with 15 or 20 considered hard-core strikers.

More than 40,000 boat people have fled Haiti since a bloody 1991 coup ousted Aristide, Haiti's first freely elected president. The United States has shipped most of them back, claiming they were economic migrants. Refugees claim they are fleeing army terror.

At the meeting with Mrs. Clinton, Jackson said he expressed concerns about the lack of quality health care in urban and rural areas.

Senator Packwood scrutinized by Senate Ethics Committee; Bryan

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) Nevada Sen. Richard Bryan says he never wanted the job of leading the ethics investigation into Sen. Bob Packwood's alleged sexual misconduct but he's already getting tough.

After just a week as chairman of the Senate Ethics Committee, Bryan expanded the Packwood probe to investigate charges the Oregon Republican and his aides tried to intimidate witnesses by dredging up details of their sex lives.

Bryan is looking into charges that Packwood made improper sexual advances toward women who were employees, job applicants or lobbyists.

But the former prosecutor says he is trying to keep his sense of humor despite the political pressure.

"The only reasonable prospect is all of us could get eaten alive," the Democrat quipped before a civics group last week in Reno, Nev.

Bryan and Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., led the committee to adopt a shield rule to prevent Packwood's accusers from being grilled about their sexual histories.

The actions set the stage for a hearing, possibly in public, of charges against Packwood.

Bryan is the most practiced criminal lawyer on the panel. And after being elected to the state Legislature, he wrote the Nevada rape shield law to protect victims from intrusive questions.

"In such a situation, it took a very strong woman to come forward and to confront her accuser," he told the Portland newspaper in an interview.

Bryan's job will be to avoid bad reviews like those given to the Senate confirmation hearing for Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas in 1992.

"He's not from the old boy school. He's very open-minded, diligent and straight-shooting," said Gene Kimmelman, legislative director for the Consumer Federation of America.

The freshman lawmaker has taken on more senior colleagues and promoted a tougher standard for ethics in his two years on the ethics committee.

Last year, he was the lone dissenter in a 5-1 ethics committee decision to rebuke Oregon's senior senator, Mark Hatfield, for failure to report private gifts and a real estate deal with a friend.

Bryan said the letter of rebuke to Hatfield was too lenient.

In the past, the Ethics Committee has rarely done more than criticize senators accused of questionable conduct. Expulsion has been used only for the most serious cases, such as treason.

Bryan supports a proposal to appoint a panel of outsiders to conduct ethics investigations and make recommendations to the Senate, which is required under the Constitution to discipline its own members.

He has said Congress must live up to a higher moral standard, which "means there is a greater chance of transgression."

Associates say Bryan has developed a high tolerance for stress and hot meeting rooms where controversies must be ironed out between adversaries.

A banker recently complained about being required to sit for three hours in an 85-degree room while Bryan led a hearing on Nevada's credit crisis.

"Sometimes it's helpful to turn up the heat," Bryan said.

Clinton approval rate plummets

CINCINNATI (AP) President Clinton received higher disapproval ratings during his first few weeks in office than his predecessors did at the same point in their terms, a statewide poll reported Monday.

The poll found that 56 percent of those surveyed approved of Clinton's performance, while 34 percent disapproved and 10 percent had no opinion.

The Ohio figures compare with a similar Gallup poll that was taken Jan. 24-26.

Of those who disapproved of the president's performance, 11 percent cited the issue of homosexuals in the military, while 9 percent expressed beliefs that he is ignoring promises that were made during the campaign.

Clinton's approval ratings are only slightly lower than those of Reagan (59 percent) and Bush (63 percent) at the same early point in their terms, but his 34 percent disapproval rating is more than twice that of his predecessors.

The poll was released prior to Clinton's nationally televised address Monday night from the Oval Office.

U.N. may soon take control

U.S. military force fulfills purpose in Somalia

• Command of troops in Somalia may pass from U. S. to U.N. control in a matter of weeks as a majority of violence in that area is quelled. Though there is still some violence, U.S. troops may return to America as soon as May.

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) U.S. command of international forces in Somalia could pass to the United Nations within weeks, a U.N. spokesman said Saturday, and most American forces could be home by late April.

The news came as military officials expressed increasing confidence that Operation Restore Hope, now in its third month, could be handed over to U.N. command. The U.S.-led military coalition has quelled most of the clan violence that had made it nearly impossible for relief workers to feed millions of starving Somalis.

The international force continues to face gunfire and seize weapons, however. Shootouts left two Somalis wounded on Friday, and Italian troops sweeping through a Mogadishu neighborhood on Saturday uncovered arms including more than 100 grenades, 12,000 detonators and four missiles.

Farouk Mawlawi, the spokesman for U.N. operations in Somalia, said U.S. forces could hand over the international operation to a U.N. commander in a matter of weeks.

He said U.N. peacekeepers would need authorization from the Security Council to use force to maintain order in Somalia, a policy that would be unprecedented for a U.N. peacekeeping force.

"We couldn't have the traditional peacekeeping operation," Mawlawi said, adding that he expected Security Council approval when it takes up the issue next week.

A U.S. military spokesman said most of the 19,000 American troops and support personnel could head home before May.

"Looking at our timeline, that's perhaps technically feasible by mid- to late April," said Marine Col. Fred Peck. "That's presupposing everything happens in quick succession," starting with the Security Council action, he added.

In Washington, President Clinton said he was encouraged by the reported timetable.

"This does need to go from a U.S. mission to a U.N. mission," Clinton said.

Coalition forces from 22 other nations number 14,000. Officials are proposing a U.N.-led force of about 20,000 troops, including at least 3,000 Americans.

Meanwhile Saturday, the international force continued to seize weapons.

Italian forces raided homes and shops in a neighborhood in northeast Mogadishu and found weapons hidden under bags of rice, blankets and furniture, said Army Capt. Ed Loomis, a U.S. military spokesman.

The stashes included 25 rifles, 22 heavy weapons, 103 hand grenades, 12,000 electronic detonators, 26 artillery and mortar shells, two TOW missiles and two Milan missiles, and four rocket-propelled grenades, he said.

No one was arrested or injured in the sweep, and some people even volunteered to hand over weapons, he said.

On Friday, a Marine observation team wounded a Somali after coming under fire, Loomis said. Tunisian troops also shot and wounded a Somali in the leg after he and four others tried to enter a supply compound, presumably to steal, Loomis said.

Hussein seeks dialogue with Washington, D.C.

• Saddam Hussein hopes for a new relationship with America based on "mutual respect," but President Clinton maintains sanctions against Iraq.

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) President Saddam Hussein, saying he wants "new relations" with Washington and is urging President Clinton to open a dialogue.

In his first personal appeal to the new U.S. president, Saddam also praised Clinton for opposing the Vietnam War as a student.

"We, and all of humanity, consider this aspect in Clinton's personality a mark of strength," Saddam said, according to a report by the official Iraqi News Agency on Sunday.

Saddam made the statements at a meeting late Saturday with peace activist and former U.S. attorney general Ramsey Clark.

"I believe that the president of the biggest country in the world ... needs to try wisdom, and not weapons," INA quoted Saddam as telling Clark.

"Is he ready to listen to the viewpoint of Iraq? If he is ready, I simply believe that we can pave the way for building new relations based on mutual respect ... regardless of what had happened," INA quoted Saddam as saying.

Other Iraqi officials and the state-run media have made previous overtures to Clinton, who took office on Jan. 20.

Suffering under U.N. sanctions imposed after the Persian Gulf War, Iraq is trying to improve relations with the United States.

A U.S.-led coalition drove Iraqi occupation troops out of Kuwait in 1991 and, in his last two weeks as U.S. president, George Bush ordered air attacks on Iraq to punish Saddam for defying U.N. cease-fire resolutions.

There was no public reaction from the Clinton administration to Saddam's reported comments.

Clinton has so far maintained the Bush administration's hard line against lifting the sanctions until Baghdad complies with the U.N. resolutions that established a cease-fire in the gulf war.

In particular, the United States is concerned about Saddam's compliance with resolutions calling for Iraq to destroy its weapons of mass destruction and end the persecution of minorities.

Saddam's conversation with Clark was a major news item in Iraq. The Iraqi television anchorman spent 70 minutes reading an account of what transpired.

Clark was not immediately available to comment on the report.

WALESA SIGNS LAW BANNING ALMOST ALL ABORTIONS

WARSAW, Poland (AP) President Lech Walesa signed an anti-abortion law Monday that strictly limits the procedure and punishes doctors who violate the rules, ending nearly three years of debate.

The anti-abortion bill - which reverses Poland's virtual abortion-on-demand regulations from the Communist era - permits abortion in only four situations.

Opinion polls indicated most Poles favored retaining a liberal abortion law.

NIGER HOLDS FIRST FREE ELECTION FOR DEMOCRATIC GOVERNMENT

NIAMEY, Niger (AP) Citizens voted Sunday for their first democratic government in a ballot brought about by violent strikes but delayed by a shortage of money and shaky security in the north.

State-run radio said turnout among the more than 4 million voters was higher than expected, despite threats of disruption by nomadic Tuareg rebels.

Twelve parties have 619 candidates contesting 83 national assembly seats.

Troops were out in full force in the capital, and 120 observers from the United States, France, Canada, the Organization of African Unity and other groups were monitoring the vote.

CHINA ACCUSES WEST OF FABRICATING 'CHINA THREAT'

BEIJING (AP) An official commentary today accused the U. S. and other nations of spreading "slanderous rumors" and denied Beijing had designs on its neighbors. The commentary, carried by the Xinhua News Agency, said that even though China insists it is not increasing offensive capability, and "some people in Western countries have deliberately spread slanderous rumors."

"They are unwilling to see the renewal of the Chinese nation and the reunification of China," it said.

"We are ready for a mutual compromise"

Israel desires end to conflicts

• Israeli Foreign Minister Peres told an American Jewish group that Israel is eager to work towards achieving peace with the Arabs, even to the point of discussing territory. Secretary of State Warren Christopher wil soon be traveling to the Middle East to facilitate peace talks.

WASHINGTON (AP) Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said Sunday that Israel is prepared to make compromises, including ones involving territory, and wants to get on with peace talks with the Arabs.

"Morally we do not want to dominate other people and politically we do not want to create a Yugoslav-like tragedy," Peres said in remarks to a leading U.S. Jewish group.

"We are ready for a mutual compromise, including a territorial one," the Israeli foreign minister told the National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council's annual meeting.

Peace talks between the Israelis and Arabs have been in limbo since mid-December, when Israel abruptly ordered the deportation of 400 Palestinians into southeastern Lebanon.

Since then, Israel has agreed to allow 101 of the men back into the country and said it would allow the rest back by the end of the year.

Peres, in his speech to the U.S. Jewish group, did not address the matter of the deported Palestinians directly, but said Israel was eager to resume peace negotiations with the Arabs.

"We want to attain peace with all our neighbors - the Palestinian people, the Jordanians, the Syrians and the Lebanese. And we want to build new structures based on regional security" and development of the regneo's economy, he said.

Meanwhile, Peres said that Israel is "extremely comfortable" with the incoming Clinton administration in Washington. "We sense an air of friendship," he said.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher soon will be traveling to the Middle East in an attempt to get the talks between Israel and the Arab representatives again on track.

De Klerk, ANC deny rumors of power-sharing agreement; future talks planned for multi-party conference

• South African President de Klerk and the African National Congress deny rumors of a secret power-sharing agreement and face opposition from political groups.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) The government and the ANC said Sunday they had not reached final agreement on a power-sharing plan, backing away from previous statements in the face of opposition among other political groups.

A government spokesman had said the African National Congress and government agreed to a black-white power-sharing plan in which an interim government would lead the nation for about five years.

"The interpretation that we have entered into fixed agreements is wrong," President F.W. de Klerk told David Frost in a Cape Town interview broadcast on South African television.

"We believe that final agreement must be reached at a multi-party conference," de Klerk said, adding that "great progress" was being made.

ANC spokesman Carl Niehaus also denied a deal had been struck, but said the concept of power sharing was being discussed.

Another black group denounced the power-sharing plan.

"We can't wait for another five years for liberation. We want liberation now," Clarence Makwetu, president of the black nationalist Pan Africanist Congress.

The government has been holding bilateral talks with the ANC and Inkatha for the past month in hopes of resuming multi-party negotiations on power sharing that collapsed last year.

They broke down over differences among the various groups over how best to complete the transition to democracy and draft a new constitution.

Inkatha leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi has accused the ANC and government of making secret deals behind his back and said the power-sharing proposal was an example of this.

Temporary extension only possible

U.N. forces may withdraw from Croatia

• A movement towards a peace settlement is mandatory between Serbs and Croats in Croatia or U.N. troops will be withdrawns says United Nations Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali, but Serbs fear "ethnic cleansing" and refuse to lay down arms.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali said today that U.N. peacekeepers will have to be withdrawn from Croatia unless Serbs and Croats halt their fighting and move toward a peace settlement.

In a report to the Security Council, Boutros-Ghali said there's been no progress on the diplomatic front and no letup in the fighting. Some 16,000 U.N. peacekeepers are deployed in Croatia where Croats are battling minority Serbs, and at least 18 peacekeepers have been killed.

"I have come to the conclusion that unless these two factors are addressed, a sound basis will not exist for renewing UNPROFOR's mandate in Croatia," he said.

Boutros-Ghali had first expressed doubt about keeping the peacekeepers in Croatia in January, after Croatia launched an offensive in violation of a cease-fire agreement. The offensive received international and U.N. condemnation.

The U.N. Protection Force is deployed in four Serb-held areas of Croatia. The Security Council has the final say on whether to extend its mandate. The Serbs had been refusing to disband their militias and disarm, fearing reprisals and "ethnic cleansing" attacks from the Croats if they laid down their arms.

The U.N. force was supposed to provide the Serbs with security while they and the Croats reached a political settlement that would lead to confidence between the communities, disarming of the Serb militias, and political control by Croatian authorities.

In contrast to the brutal war in Bosnia-Herzegovina, Croatia remained fairly tranquil for most of the past year with the U.N. peacekeeper guarding the Serbs there.

But last month Croatian forces began a partially successful offensive to try to win back Serb-held territory in the Krajina region of southwestern Croatia, one of the areas under nominal control of the United Nations.

Croat soldiers overran U.N. cease fire lines to attack the Serbs.

The Serbs, who had placed their artillery, tanks and other heavy weapons in U.N.-guarded armories for safekeeping under the peace agreement raided the arms depots and stole back their big guns to fight back the Croatian assault.

Boutros-Ghali told the Security Council that "an urgent effort must be made, at a very senior level, to resolve the problems arising from the recent Croatian offensive."

Boutros-Ghali said he could only recommend a temporary extension of the U.N. force's mission in Croatia, until March 31.

Or perhaps this was when she was working at the ice cream parlor?—Dave H., College Station, TX

A. Dear Dave: An excellent Brady question! Marcia did not buy these items. You're probably too young to remember this, but in 1968 the Flaming-Groovy Act was passed. Under the stipulations of this act, every U.S. citizen was issued a rad wig and cool shades for just such an occasion.

15-9 Lancers host Ferum saturday in home finale

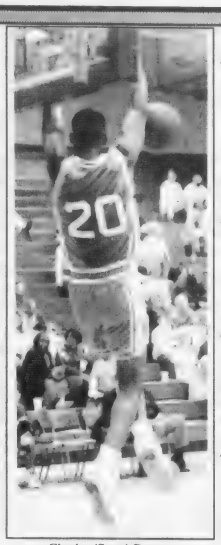
Lancers end Queens home streak

The Lancers, who stopped NAIA power Pfeiffer's home streak at 42 in late January, ended Queens' string of home victories at 12 Saturday in Charlotte, N.C. by a 76-69 count.

Longwood put together one of its best showings of the season both defensively and offensively. The Lancers also got solid play from a number of different players.

Down 37-33 at the half with 13 turnovers, Longwood hit an amazing 13 of 17 field goals (76.5 percent) and 17 of 18 free throws (94.4 percent) in the second half.

Sparked by the scoring of Matt Watkins, Longwood caught up to Queens and forced ties at 39-39, 41-41, 43-43 and 48-48 midway through the second period. Watkins scored all eight of his points in the second half. Twice he drove to the hoop and scored with his left hand.



Senior captain Bryan Weaver actually put the Lancers ahead to stay with 10:12 left when he scored to put Longwood on top 50-48. It was senior Chuck Laster who keyed the decisive run which dethroned the Royals for good.

Up 54-52 with 5:50 left, Longwood outscored Queens 12-5 over the next four minutes to take a 66-57 lead with 1:30 to go. Laster had six points in the surge, including a dunk. The Royals, who dropped to 18-6, never got closer than seven the rest of the way.

"Coming into the game our goal was to stop their 3-point shooters," said Longwood coach Ron Carr. "I thought we did a real nice job defensively. We slowed down their three top outside shooters, but we gave up some things inside."

Queens hit just four of 12 from bonus range. The Royals had trouble even getting off their 3-point attempts. A team with NCAA Playoff aspirations, Queens dropped to 18-6 with the defeat. The Royals were reportedly ranked fourth in the South Atlantic Region last week.

Charles Brown led a group of four Longwood players who reached double figures. He scored 17 points. Michael Druitt and Laster added 14 points with Laster pulling off a game-high eight rebounds. Weaver had 10 points and seven boards. J. B. Neill added seven points. The win was Longwood's first at Queens in three tries. The Royals still hold a 4-3 edge in the series.

Charles (Soup) Brown

Brown player of the week pick

Junior men's basketball player Charles (Soup) Brown , who scored 33 points while hitting 13 of 16 shots from the floor last week, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period Feb. 7-14. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

Brown, a 6-3 guard, scored 16 points on 7 of 8 shooting from the floor in a 72-63 homecourt win over West Virginia Wesleyan last Monday. Saturday at Queens, he tossed in 17 points, nailing 6 of 8 shots as Longwood beat the Royals 76-69. He also had six rebounds and went 4-4 from the free throw line at Queens. Brown was not only Longwood's top scorer in both games, but he also shot an uncanny 81.2% from the field.

"Soup (Brown) has played with a lot more confidence the last couple of games," said Lancer coach Ron Carr. "His shot selection has been much better than earlier this month."

Longwood's leading scorer for the season, Brown is averaging 13.4 ppg. and 4.2 rpg.. He ranks second on the team in assists (65) and is tied for the lead in steals (35). His play has been a key factor in Longwood's 15-8 record. The Lancers have won 11 of their last 13 games with four still to play. Lancer MVP last season, Brown scored 13.4 ppg. and pulled off 5.1 rpg. as the Lancers finished 14-14.

Litton just 42 points from 1,000 in career

Lady Lancers drop two: Record now 6-16

Longwood's women's basketball team dropped two tough games last week, losing to Virginia State 80-67 on the road Thursday and to Queens (N.C.) College 62-51 Saturday in Lancer Hall. The Lady Lancers took a record of 6-16 into Monday night's contest at Mount Olive (N.C.) College.

Against Queens, Longwood fell behind 24-5 early as QC's Betsy Bergdoll buried four three-pointers in the first 15 minutes of the game. Bergdoll would finish with five treys giving her 340 in her career to tie the NCAA women's career record for all divisions.

Behind 35-18 at halftime, coach Shirley Duncan gave her squad quite the "talk" in the lockerroom during the intermission. With a 15 minute halftime break, Duncan used almost every bit of it as the Lady Lancers returned to the floor with under a minute left in the intermission.

Whatever Duncan said must have hit home. Longwood stormed back against the Royals, outscoring the visitors 21-6 to close within 41-39 with 10:48 to play on 2-3 free throws by junior Ana Litton. The run was sparked by freshman Amy Bradley with two baskets including a three-pointer, sophomore Sara Philbrick with two hoops, a bucket each from freshman Charity Owens and sophomore Kirsten Hillgaard and back-to-back three-pointers from Litton just ahead of her charity tosses.

Queens was able to regroup though and limited the hosts to just 12 points the rest of the way while scoring 21 of its own as Jennifer Houck scored eight points down the stretch including 6-6 free throws in the final 1:24.

Litton wound up with a game-high 22 points and 14 rebounds, a new career-high for Litton. Hillgaard scored eight points with seven rebounds and Bradley added seven points, all in the second half, with four assists as well. Philbrick tacked on six points and grabbed 10 rebounds.

Lady Lancer Basketball 2-2-2

Virginia State 80-Longwood 67

Longwood controlled almost the entire first half of action before VSU managed to knott the score at 34-34 by the intermission. LC had jumped to a 9-2 lead in the first four minutes and led 12-6 before the Trojanettes rallied for tie scores at 14-14, 18-18 and 22-22. The Lady Lancers then extended their lead once again to 29-22 with 4:31 remaining in the half behind Philbrick's four points and two free throws by Litton as a result of a technical foul on VSU.

The technical seemed to ignite the hosts, as Va. State outscored Longwood 12-5 for the halftime deadlock. The Lady Lancers seemed to regain control early in the second half, grabbing a 40-35 lead with 17:52 remaining on two hoops by Philbrick. At that point VSU began a tremendous run on the Lady Lancers, outscoring LC 15-2 for a 50-42 lead with 14:37 left. VSU extended the run to 26-6 and it was 34-7 before Longwood was able to regroup. By then, VSU led 69-47 and just 8:13 remained to be played.

Longwood did make a final run at the Trojanettes, outscoring VSU 14-2 to cut the lead to 71-61 with 3:30 left. Bradley, freshman Sheri Llewellyn and Owens sparked the spurt by Longwood but its wasn't enough as the game was already over by then.

Litton and Philbrick each scored 14 points for LC, with Bradley adding a career-high 13 points along with five steals and four assists. Owens scored 10 points and grabbed eight rebounds and Llewellyn contributed eight points and seven boards. Llewellyn broke a finger in practice Friday and is likely out for the remainder of the year.

Through 22 games, Litton tops Longwood in scoring with her 22.1 ppg. average. Litton ranked 13th in NCAA Division II scoring in the Feb. 3 issue of The NCAA News with a 21.5 average through Jan. 31. Litton needs just 42 points to reach 1,000 in her LC career.

Litton has been assaulting the record book at Longwood this year. She has equaled the mark for points in a game (43 against Converse Jan. 14) and three-point field goal attempts in a game (12), while establishing new marks for field goals (18) and field goal attempts (38) in a game. As for seasonal records, Litton is currently second in field goals (197) and scoring average (22.1), third in points (486) and fourth in three-point field goals (40). Additionally, Litton leads the team in assists with 73 (3.3 avg.) and steals with 68 (3.1), is second in rebounding with 6.0 rpg. and third in blocked shots with 12.

Hillgaard is scoring 7.9 ppg. and grabbing 5.9 rpg., while Owens scores 6.5 ppg. and grabs a team-high 9.0 rpg.. Hillgaard and Owens each have a team-high 18 blocked shots and Owens is second in steals with 44. Philbrick has averaged 9.6 ppg. and 7.0 rpg. in 14 games.

Bradley has averaged 8.0 ppg. and 5.0 assists in the last four games as a starter. She now scores 3.1 ppg. overall and is third on the team in assists with 50 (2.5). Freshman Kerri Johnson is second in assists with 69 (3.5).

Following Monday's game at Mount Olive, Longwood travels to Spartanburg, S.C. this weekend for games with Converse Saturday night and Wofford Sunday afternoon.

Five wrestlers ranked in region

Longwood defeats Washington & Lee

Longwood's wrestling team hosted Washington & Lee last Thursday in Lancer Hall and came away with a 45-12 victory. Coach Steve Nelson's squad is now 7-13 in dual-meet competition this year.

Leading the Lancers against W & L were freshman Stuart Chung with a 19-2 major decision at 134 and sophomore Bryan Hartley with a pin at 167. Chung is now ranked first in the region at 126, as is sophomore Mark Helberg at 177. Helberg gained a forfeit victory against W & L at 190. Hartley is ranked second in the region at 158 along with senior Brian Jones at 150. Jones took a 13-2 decision at 158 against W & L.

Others winning matches for the Lancers were freshman Joey Hearl with a forfeit victory at 118, sophomore Joe Silvus a pin at 150, junior James Mauldin a pin at 177 and senior Brent Newell a forfeit victory at heavyweight. Newell is also ranked third in the region in his weight class.

Current records for the Lancers are Helberg (21-9), Chung (19-11), Silvus (18-10), Jones (12-9), Hartley (12-12), Newell (12-13), Hearl (8-11) and Mauldin (6-10).

Coach Steve Nelson's Lancers next take to the mat Sunday at Pembroke State (N.C.) University for the NCAA Division II Southeast Regionals. The Lancers will be attempting to qualify an individual(s) for the Division II Nationals for the sixth straight year.

Fine Arts Center, Education Center to cost $4.8 million; funded by bond

By Debbie Wilson
Rotunda Staff

• Pending construction plans include the creation of a new Fine Arts Center and Education Center at an estimated cost of $4.8 million dollars. Funding for the Fine Arts Center has been provided by an already-approved general obligation bill, but financing for the other project will require yet another bill.

If there are plans for renovation, construction, or a new building on campus, the Business Affairs office coordinates and plans how it will all happen. The next construction project is the new Education Center and Fine Arts Center.

The Education Center will be connected to the south side of Lancer, which is currently a parking lot, and will be bordered by Franklin Street. The whole building is to house the Department of Education, Special Education, Social Work, and the Health, Physical Education and Recreation departments. It is estimated by the Business Affairs office that the construction of the new Education Center will cost $2.8 million.

Because of a General Obligation Bond, voted on by the citizenry of Virginia last November, Longwood has all the funds for building this center. Construction is set to begin one year from now.

The Education Center will be built so that the second story goes across Pine Street and attaches to a new Fine Arts Center. The Fine Arts Center will include exhibition space, gallery space, and a reception area. The works that will be shown include the college's, the students', and traveling exhibitions. There will also be an area for educational programs.

In addition, between the Fine Arts Center and Wygal, the land is naturally sloped for an amphitheater. Other perks include skylights in the overpass to open up the space and make it brighter, and a colonnades area on either side of the Fine Arts Center.

The estimated cost for the Fine Arts Center is $2 million, but Longwood only has half of this money so far.

Ideally, the Education Center and Fine Arts Center should be built at the same time. If the other half of the money for the Fine Arts Center cannot be raised in a year, though, it will be postponed while the Education Center continues as scheduled.

Also in the works is the remodeling of Wynne. Classes in Wynne will be moved to the Education Center while this is taking place. When finished, Wynne will house the Physical Education offices, a wrestling room, a weight room, and locker rooms for our teams and visiting teams.

The estimated cost for remodeling Wynne is $3 million. In order to have enough money, Longwood will have to sell a state bond. This construction is scheduled for 1995-96.

Local banks balk at expense, inconvenience

VPBLA Hurley assures SGA that campus ATM construction pending

By Mindy Oakes
Rotunda Staff

•Vice President of Business and Legislative Affairs Richard Hurley reassured the Student Government Association that an ATM would soon be available to students, and students are eager to see it.

Plans are still in progress to provide Longwood students with an Automated Teller Machine (ATM).

Richard Hurley, Vice President of Business and Legislative Affairs, gave a presentation at an Student Government Association (SGA) meeting on February 19th and reassured the members about the ATM's arrival. He said proposals were due back to him by February 28th.

These proposals went out to First Virginia and Central Fidelity. However, Hurley has not yet received any proposals.

He contacted First Virginia, and the response was that the machine would be too far away from its main branch to be maintained.

He also dealt with Central Fidelity, but bank officials implied that the bank did want to deal with the extra cost of constructing the room for the machine and telephone lines to go in. Hurley is prepared to negotiate with Central Fidelity about the construction cost.

Some students are impatient and feel something should have happened by now, because the convenience of having an ATM machine on campus would be of great use.

When sophomore Christy Hammer was asked if she would use a money machine on campus, she replied, "yes, I would use the machine because it would be more convenient to run to the student union instead of running to town."

Tim Coster and Robert Lang feel that " the ATM machine will be very accessible for obtaining quick cash at any time during the week."

Tax may be as high as twenty cents per pack.

New cigarette taxes pending, but will have little effect on farmers

By Heather Lustig
Rotunda Staff

• Taxes on cigarettes may be levied in an amount ranging from one to twenty cents a pack, but this will have little effect on tobacco farmers.

Virginia state government is once more trying to raise tobacco taxes. According to The Farmville Herald, two bills have been proposed to raise the tax on cigarettes anywhere from one cent to twenty cents.

These bills will be taxing the cigarettes purchased in Virginia; the purpose behind these bills is to either fund education in certain areas or to provide more money to the community.

The first bill, which suggests raising the taxes by one cent per pack, will use the tax money for educational reasons. Areas that are suffering from "educational disparity" would profit from this new tobacco tax.

The second bill, which would raise the tax by either twenty or thirty cents, would divide equally the tax revenue between the state and the community.

Guy Hazlegrove, a Longwood College student and tobacco farmer, commented on how this new tax would affect the tobacco prices.

"In the long run," he said, "not at all. People have been smoking for centuries and aren't going to start quitting, as a whole, for decades yet."

However, growing tobacco is not something to be taken lightly. Apparently, the government allows the tobacco farmers to sell only a certain allotment.

"An allotment is tobacco poundage," explained Hazlegrove. "The tobacco grower can buy or rent an allotment from another guy, say Joe Schmoe. The grower can then do with it as he chooses."

The process followed by a tobacco farmer is to first get the allotment, and then after a certain amount of paperwork, which details the size of the allotment, then grow the tobacco.

"If the allotment is three thousand pounds, I can only sell three thousand pounds," said Hazlegrove. "If I have any extra, I can hold on to it until next year and try to sell it then."

The tobacco goes to market and companies bid against each other for it.

The market high for one type of tobacco, commonly known as Burley (cigarette tobacco) was $1.84 per pound. Dark tobacco, which is used for cigars, chewing, and snuff, was priced at $1.59 a pound.

Sturgill honored for educational efforts

By Carol Ann Semones
Rotunda Staff

• Adjunct statistics professor Rebecca Sturgill is given Catalyst Award for her efforts in broadening the student experience through the Longwood Seminar Class.

Ms. Rebecca Sturgill, an adjunct statistics professor, has been recognized as the Fall 1992 Catalyst Award faculty/administration winner by VA COOL (Virginia Campus Outreach Opportunity League).

Sturgill earned the reward by showing outstanding efforts in "service learning:" the integration of community service into the academic curriculum.

Her role in the implementation of the Longwood Seminar class was specifically recognized in her nomination.

Sturgill was nominated for the award by Trey Piersall, who acts as the community service coordinator of the G.I.V.E. Clearinghouse, the organization which supervises all freshman seminar class volunteer efforts..

Through the Longwood freshman seminar class, Rebecca Sturgill has attempted to give the new students an opportunity to grow not only academically, but world-consciously as well.

As stated in Piersall's nomination "Rebecca Sturgill has worked with over 70 college students and helped make a positive change in the lives of countless individuals."

'Erotic music' bill stirs up oppostion, deemed by judge unconstitutional

OLYMPIA (AP) A bill seeking to fix constitutional problems with Washington state's erotic music law ran into a strong opposition from the music industry and the American Civil Liberties Union.

The law enacted last year would allow a county prosecutor to ask a judge to declare that a particular recording appeals to minors' prurient interests and offends community standards. If the judge agrees, the recording must be labeled "adults only."

However, Judge Mary Brucker declared the law unconstitutional, saying it is vague, causes record stores to censor themselves and might be chilling to the artistic instincts of musicians.

Brucker said the measure was vague because, if a judge in one county declared a piece of music appealed to the prurient interests of minors in that county, the music could not be sold to minors anywhere in the state. But the law offers no mechanism to alert others to the ban, she said.

Brucker's ruling is now on appeal and is scheduled to be argued before the Supreme Court late this year.

PERSPECTIVES

Escape the midterm crunch

Many freshmen are probably grumbling right now as they have to explain their midterm semester grades to their parents. And other students are probably panicking as they realize that the end of the semester is drawing near and they have done, well, just about nothing on those major research papers that are due in five of their six classes (thank god for that underwater basket weaving class!)

But as these students equivocate and prevaricate to both themselves and their parents, they should take at least a few moments to face the reality of the situation, without all the rationalization.

College is a major responsibility. It is also a tremendous effort. And it is very easy to forget that you are in the classroom for something a little more tangible than the pleasure of hearing your professor lecture. The thought that "I still have plenty of time to bring up that D" is turning to "What do I have to do to salvage this class?" and students are scurrying about their professors' offices in the vain hope of some tremendous extra credit project to replace those two failed tests.

Most professors go out of their way to help students. Though many do not offer extra credit, some might drop a student's first test grade if he or she excels in all subsequent tests. Or they may offer to weigh later grades more heavily.

But whatever the method, many faculty members are quite willing to help the student in any ethical manner that is in their power.

However, the student should never put his or herself in a situation where this is necessary. Ideally, students should attend every class, read and annotate every assignment, join study groups, get a tutor, and make an attempt to truly get to know the professor through out of class interaction. We would surmise, though, that a majority of students don't even come close to this ideal. It is, frankly, much more enjoyable to stay wrapped up in bed on these frosty mornings than to trudge over to Wynne (from Tabb) for an 8:30 class, and students are prone to enjoy the "easy life."

But though there may never be the "perfect" student, every student has responsibilities that are easily attainable. These include being prepared for the class discussion (Remember the syllabus? It outlines all the major class assignments throughout the semester), and, even more basic, simply being present in the class. No amount of textbook reading can replace a lecture's notes.

And get to know your professors. That makes the learning process much easier and more enjoyable for everyone involved, and it will hopefully will prevent the need to ask for a little extra help in the class.

Civility still not a fact of life

By Heather Lustig
Rotunda Staff

For the past couple days it seems as though civility has come more and more into the every day world of the student. We received the flyers on civility in the mail and one Monday we had the student Appreciation dinner. The annual civility essay contest is underway and the entire campus has been pasted with posters on civility.

What my question to the student body and the faculty is is what exactly is civility? Is it a state of civilization? Could the student body of Longwood be considered a separate civilization with a separate culture from the rest of the world?

Are we our own little country confined within the town of Farmville? Do we have our own separate religion, etiquette, and code of honor? If you really think about it, not really. Perhaps because we are students, we are a form of a unique civilization.

Let's approach this query from another perspective and ask if civility can be broken down to just being civilized. Civilized seems so cold, so impersonal. If we were to only be civilized to one another, I think the concept of friendship would cease to exist. However, to be civilized to another person doesn't necessarily mean that you have to unfriendly, just respectful.

Civility is perhaps a respect for humanity. Not only respect for an entire culture, but the respect of an individual. Civility is a moral example that all should emulate. It was morally wrong for the four police officers to beat Rodney King. However, weren't the people of Los Angeles equally wrong? They destroyed entire sections of the city, looting and pillaging stores that were ways of life. Is it civilized to have a quota system in colleges, universities, and even in areas of employment/career opportunity? To be hired because I am a female is more insulting than to be fired because my skills were considered to be incompetent. Civility is the expansion of one's mind so that eventually stereotypes and labels will eventually fade away into a thing of the past. Because I am a blond female does not mean that I can not think for myself. Perhaps as we change and grow, civility will become more of a trait and characteristic of society and not just a wish.

Perhaps by taking civility for granted will show how our world has changed enough so there is a little less hate. As long as we hate, we will be uncivilized. What right do we have to hate another person because their skin is different from our own? What right do I have to label a group of people because they are in an organization that I was not invited to join?

Hatred is not a privilege. Rather, it is a downfall. As long as we hate, humanity is not the superior being of the planet, rather, we are more inferior in mental capacity than the one-celled protozoa we learn about in biology.

We may have evolved physically, but mentally, we are still wallowing around a couple of millennium back. One of the greatest signs that civility has become ingrained in humanity will be when applications no longer have those little areas where one has to check what race they are. What does it matter? As long as they can do the job and get the job done well, does it really matter what color their skin are? Does it make a difference what sexual organs they have?

ELLEN GOODMAN

What a difference a year makes. Remember all the rap on Candidate Bill Clinton? That he wanted to be all things to all people? That he couldn't make hard decisions? That he was afraid of alienating anyone?

On one of those endless talk shows—some candidate-on-the-couch hour—he was asked how his childhood with an alcoholic and sometimes abusive stepfather had formed his psyche. He answered, "It made me dislike conflict. I tend to be a people-pleaser."

Well, the man who went to Congress last Wednesday night was no feel-good Willie by any stretch of imagination. For the first time in years, a president delivered a speech without reaching into that small generic stash of heroes to sweeten the message. There were no pretty phrases in his hour-long economic lecture, no mornings in America, no eloquence to stir the blood and raise the goosebumps.

Not once did Bill Clinton bite his little-boy lip. Nor was his program designed to make everybody whistle while they work.

If there were promises in the economic plan there were also enough taxes to displease every one of the people some of the time. Or, as the man who dislikes conflict said succinctly, "If the package is picked apart, there'll be something that will anger each of us and won't please anybody."

Does this mark some turnabout in Clinton's character—a deliberate bolt from crowd pleaser to chief combatant? Not exactly.

I never did think that Clinton's style was just ingratiating. If I needed a label, I'd call it a style of mediating.

If we must go back to psychotools, that son of a semifunctional family assumed the role of holding the family together. As a politician he was a good listener, a decent synthesizer. He was most skilled at keeping all the parties at the table until they had made what some called, disparagingly, a compromise. Others of course called it resolving conflicts.

The man has shown a remarkable ability to make and keep connections. Not just between individuals but between constituencies and even ideas. In computer terms, he reminds me of an X TREE. In human terms he can keep all the political puppies in the basket.

There are leaders who are more comfortable working in concert than dominating. It's most true for women, at home or at work. But it's also true for the new president.

Some people think "either-or"; Clinton thinks "and." You can here it in his language. Rights and responsibilities. You can hear it in his policies. Jobs and deficit reduction.

Some leaders think win-lose. But in the management guru-ese of the era, this president tries to wrestle down an elusive formula for win-win.

The dislike even fear of conflict can make people avoid trouble. It can also fuel the effort to settle troubles.

Listening to the sober outlines of his program as he takes the show on the road, what I hear is a man who's trying to design an economic peace treaty, not a war plan. A treaty for a society that's already in conflict.

The moral backbone and the political savvy behind this balancing act of a program is the stated attempt to lessen the struggles between rich and poor, old and young, black and white, between visions of the short-run and the long-run, between the values of individualism and those of community. Such a plan of economic togetherness is altogether in character for this mediator. Indeed, the one Clinton delivered with real emotion was: "The test of this plan cannot be 'what is in it for me'; it has got to be 'what is in it for us.'"

I don't know if the new president can, as he put it, "scale the walls of people's skepticism." Those walls run pretty high. Skepticism about everything from the ability to reach the underclass to the ability to improve the environment. Skepticism about progress itself.

Nor do I know if his program can turn around the economy. Our economy is as dependent on the people who run GM and IBM as on the people who run the government. What happens in Europe and Asia may have as much impact on American jobs as what happens in Washington.

But the man who came to Congress last Wednesday night had the sound of a leader who believes that resolving conflicts is worth a fight. What a difference a year makes.

Young sparks interest in medieval warfare

By Janet Batta
Rotunda Staff

Young boys might dream of becoming knights in shining armor and little girls wish that they could become princesses, but for Andrew Young, a first year history major, donning his suit of armor is as ordinary as going to class.

Young seems ideally suited for his hobby. At 6'6", with a sturdy build and shoulder-length brown hair, he seems more at home clad in leather, wool, and steel than in the clothes of today.

"Generally, knights on horseback had stronger upper-bodies because the majority of their time was spent on horseback. The infantry had a more well-proportioned body type. Actual x-rays have been taken of period soldiers which support this hypothesis," says Young.

He also has a number of other theories and observations about the medieval period. "In examining historical evidence (i.e. manuscripts and accounts), the decline of the armored cavalry was a result of the Hundred Years War. Basically, this event created an overabundence of mercenary armies, which were trained in the use of polearms (spears with blades at the end), rather than sword combat, which required a much higher level of training. Individually the lowly foot soldiers skill was no match for a knight that was weaned on a sword and raised as a warrior for life."

"The institution of knighthood, however ominous as it may seemed was no match for the greater war machine which consisted of that lowly footsoldier along with thousands of others. Even plate armour, as protective as it may appear, was very susceptible to the cutting and thrusting power that characterized the large standing armies mode of warfare. It simply outpowered the armoured knights."

"Of course," Young continues, "firepower did prove ultimately effective because of the increase in the armour's weight in the 17th century, but I see it as a catalyst. The polearm introduced the death of our knight in shining armour in history."

Young applies his interest, which stems from a tour of Europe with his parents, in a number of ways, most especially participating in medieval reenactments (events wherein people with a similar interest in medieval life, both men and women, garb themselves in period clothing and participate in activities reminiscent of the time, such as social activities, buying and selling, and, of course, the true sport of non-choreographed battles in which the paricipants actually fight with wooden weaponry to determine the outcome), such as at the program on the arms and armor of Imperial Austria recently sponsered by the Smithsonian Institute of Washington, D.C.

A professional lecturer who visits numerous public schools every year, Young gives a realistic view of what life might have been like for people of the time, concentrating specifically on his persona, a mercenary of approximately 1410 A.D. who wears the armor known as a "white harness."

According to Young, "what makes my perspective so unique is that I actually wear the stuff. I know what it felt like."

Young is affiliated with a group of similar reenactors, all of whom are members of the Markland Medieval Mercenary Militia, which has chapters all over the east coast.

He is also involved with a larger, international organization, the Society for Creative Anachronism. He has been a member of Markland for over three years.

Some members of Markland learn to make their own armor and weapons. Young uses 16th and 17th century tools and medieval techniques to work sheets of steel into pieces of plate armor. A full suit of armor weighs approximately 85 pounds. He also creates garments out of wool and leather.

All items created by Young are appropriate to the time and made in the same way.

Young stresses the importance of tactics, not brute force, in successful warfare.

"What wins a battle is not Arnold Schwartzeneggar, Conan stereotypes but strategies. You have to keep your head. It's a skill first, but after that its luck."

"In keeping with the spirit of the Middle Ages, our group has fought battles over kegs of beer, belly dancers, and medieval jewels," adds Young jokingly.

Andrew Young also plans to use his extensive military prowess in his chosen career: he wants to be a U.S. Senator.

Players present Wilder's Our Town

Thornton Wilder's Our Town will be presented by the Longwood Players Wednesday through Saturday, Feb. 24-27, at 8 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Winner of a Pulitzer Prize, Our Town is regarded as "one of the sagest, warmest, and most deeply human scripts" in American theatre. it depicts life — and death — in a New Hampshire village in the early part of the 20th century.

As the Stage manager in the drama says, "This is the way we were in our growing up and in our marrying and in our doctoring and in our living and in our dying."

The play begins in 1901 in Grover's Corners, where the Gibbs and Webb families are neighbors. In childhood, George Gibbs and Emily Webb are playmates and their lives are woven together as neighbors' lives often are.

As they grow up, George and Emily discover that their relationship has changed. The pass into "a state of romantic but embarrassed interest in one another," and George eventually proposes to Emily over an ice cream soda at the drug store.

But happiness is not proof against tragedy. In Wilder's script, tragedy is transmuted into "the most vitally moving scene in modern theatre...a spiritual experience."

The Longwood production is directed by Melissa Johnston Price, a professional actor and director from Richmond. A 1976 Longwood graduate, Price has had major roles in numerous productions in the Richmond area.

Friday evening's performance will be signed for persons with hearing impairments.

The Saturday evening performance will be dedicated to Dr. Patton Lockwood, who retired in 1992 after 29 years on the theatre faculty.

General admission to Our Town is $5; senior citizens, Longwood employees, and area students, $3; Longwood students free with ID.s

Escort Service provides safe transportation on-campus

By Debbie Wilson
Rotunda Staff

Have you ever been afraid of walking across campus after dark? We're told that just to be safe, we should never walk alone. But what about those times when your friends just can't walk you back? That's when you call the Escort Service. The student Escorts, also known as the Night Walkers, will walk you wherever you need to go with no questions asked.

The Escort Service is a volunteer organization which was founded in 1989 by Christopher Horan (Class of 1991), Andrew Sadowski (Class of 1992), and other students with the help of James Huskey, Chief of Campus Police.

The Escorts are charged with the duties of patrolling the campus hourly and making hourly checks of the residence halls. They also provide "an extra set of eyes for the Campus Police" so that the Police are free to perform other duties.

Escorts do not carry guns, and it is not essential that they wear uniforms, although there are Escort tee-shirts available.

The only standard equipment each is required to carry is a radio. With this, they receive calls telling them where to go for their escorts.

How does one become an Escort? First, one must have a 2.0 cumulative GPA and must not be on Judicial Probation.

Next, anyone interested will be interviewed and then accepted by the supervisor, who is currently David Edwards. Once these conditions are met, all applicants must complete the proper classroom and field training.

As an Escort, each person works twice a month in a scheduled duty rotation, attends meetings, and writes a formal report in the case of any encountered incidences while on duty.

One Escort, Jason Hanchey, says of the service, "Since my partner and I started we now have regulars. A lot of people rely on us." He has also received many suggestions for off-campus escorts.

Perhaps this is one area that will be covered in the future.

Students agree with David Edwards, one stating that, "The student Escort Service serves a great purpose to the student community. I feel like we're a vital part in helping Campus Police secure the campus."

A DISPATCH FROM SPY MAGAZINE

Short and Goofy

New Yorkers on the go consume thousands of muffins every day, many of them bought from the Hot & Crusty chain, which operates eight stores in Manhattan. "The founder's idea of the ideal bread was something that was hot, right out of the oven, and with a crusty shell," explains John Sitz, a treasurer at Mr. Hot Bread Inc. Hot & Crusty's parent company. Fine. But what if the success of the Hot & Crusty chain were to start a trend in adjectival four-syllable shop names seeking to evoke the essence of their products?

En Vogue, Billy Ray Cyrus, and The Chieftains nominated for Grammy Award

NEW YORK (AP) The Grammy [illegible] market the music industry's [illegible] of the year from the [illegible] Show. En Vogue, the country's [illegible] Celtic folk-rock group [illegible] The Chieftains. All three are multiple [illegible] the award dates posted in [illegible].

EN VOGUE:

En Vogue's first album was "Born [illegible]" in 1990. The second "Funky Divas," another title describing the female quartet, has garnered four Grammy nominations.

The EastWest Records LP is nominated in the category of rhythm 'n' [illegible] performance duo or group with vocal. Its only rock song on the album "Free Your Mind," is nominated for rock performance, duo or group with vocal, and best short form video.

All four in "You're Never Gonna [illegible]" are nominated as best rhythm & blues song for Thomas McElroy and Denzil Foster, who wrote the tune for En Vogue.

The named En Vogue, she said, "was a statement of music and clothes ... mostly music. We wanted to [illegible] that was on the cutting edge. Then we decided we're going to have [illegible] the part, too."

"We like clothes, but we spend so much of our own money - on the image, sometimes we say, we may have ruined ourselves naming ourselves En Vogue. But it's OK."

All four sing leads, with Herron having the most pop oriented voice. The other girls have a more soulful sound than Lidle," she said. "I listened a lot of jazz growing up. Sarah Vaughan and Ella Fitzgerald, so maybe that had some bearing on the way I [illegible]. And I studied classical voice. I even [illegible] singing opera."

Instead, she did some acting, then auditioned for En Vogue.

If they win just one Grammy, Herron said, she hopes it'll be for "Funky Divas."

THE CHIEFTAINS:

The Chieftains, six Irishmen who play Irish traditional music on Irish traditional instruments and are known worldwide, are nominated for five Grammy Awards. It's the most nominations in one year in their 30-year history.

They're in folk, pop and country categories. Only one is in traditional folk, "An Irish Evening," recorded live in Belfast.

"I did six shows on Irish radio about the relationship between Irish music and American country music," Moloney said. When he heard "Cotton-Eyed Joe," he said, "I immediately recognized an Irish reel. 'The Mountain Top,' my grandmother used to sing. It's the same air."

"Another Country" is nominated in the contemporary folk album category. "Tahitian Skies," which Chet Atkins didn't intend to include on a tape of possible duets but which Maloney liked and arranged, is nominated as best pop instrumental. "Cotton-Eyed Joe," with Ricky Skaggs guesting, is nominated as best country instrumental. "Killybegs," by the Chieftains and the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, is nominated for country vocal collaboration.

The group will tour the United States in March. "It'll be a right old hooley - that's an Irish house dance," Moloney said.

But first, Moloney will visit India. The Chieftains have been invited to give a televised concert at the Taj Mahal to raise money for a hospital at Bhopal. It'll be either in November or Valentine's Day 1994. Moloney said he also wants to do a concert in Calcutta to benefit Mother Teresa.

BILLY RAY CYRUS:

From the moment he heard "Achy Breaky Heart," Billy Ray Cyrus loved it. "It hit me like a smash," he said.

And that's how it hit those who nominate for Grammy Awards. Cyrus' Mercury Records single, "Achy Breaky Heart," is nominated for record of the year and best male country vocal performance. He's also nominated as best new artist. The song is nominated as song of the year and country song of the year for writer Don Von Tress.

"Don was hanging wallpaper for a living," Cyrus says. "I changed his life as much as he changed mine."

Cyrus always wanted to be a star, but it didn't happen quickly. Even his best-selling debut album, "Some Gave All," finished in 1991, wasn't released for a year, during which time his wife divorced him.

"In almost 12 years being the house band somewhere, I always made music the way I make it, being myself," he said. "Quit was never an option for me. My trip to L.A. and other things that failed, every time I failed I eliminated one way that didn't work. I was one way closer to the way that did work."

His shows and photos present Cyrus as a sex symbol, but he doesn't think of himself that way. "I always picture myself as a man who makes music from Flatwoods, Ky.," he said.

His message, he said, is this: "You can be what you want to be if you believe in yourself. Don't pay attention to people who laugh and say no and scoff. Only you walk in your shoes and only you have to live and die with the results of what you do in your life. I'm walking, talking testimony to that."

As for winning Grammys, Cyrus said, "I'm just glad to even have something I performed on mentioned in the same sentence as Eric Clapton." Clapton's "Tears in Heaven" also is nominated for record of the year.

'Army of Darkness' reviewed

(AP) A tacit rule in reviewing movies is that only the best films get long and loving reviews. So when it comes to "Army of Darkness," brevity is called for.

Stunningly stupid! Amazingly bad! Incredibly awful! Just downright terrible!

Here's the dirt: Ash (Bruce Campbell), a dopey store clerk, stumbles upon an ancient "Book of the Dead" that is accompanied by all sorts of vague badness.

His hand becomes infected with the evil, so he slices it off with a chainsaw. But that doesn't work and the malevolent forces toss him back through time (with that old spinning whirlpool effect, no less), to around 1300 A.D.

In this medieval setting, Ash is captured, turned into a slave and thrown into a watery pit with slimy creatures that have supernatural strength. But when someone tosses him his chainsaw (which has magically traveled through time with him), he's able to save himself and chop up the competition.

It's sort of like "Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure" meets "The Texas Chainsaw Massacre," only without the laughs or the creepy thrills.

In quick succession, we see flying witches, men being carved to death, stabbings, people being burned to death, others being pumped with bullets, and on and on.

There's enough gratuitous violence in the first five minutes to satisfy any blood-lusting, sadistic teen-ager. Everything after that simply turns the stomach.

There's also pages of award-losing dialogue, like the witch screeching, "You shall die!" Or Ash's come-on to the fair maiden, "Give me some sugar, baby." Or an angry skeleton croaking, "I've got a bone to pick with you." Or another witch-like woman saying, "I may be bad, but I feel good."

Of course, there's an army of gooey, drippy-faced corpses (what a waste of latex!) and the requisite marching skeletons that move herky-jerky across the screen.

Perhaps the only bright spots are a couple of dazzling moments when some of those computer-generated special effects pay off.

But in the end, this film doesn't even deliver comic-book camp, which could have been the only redeeming part of it. So if someone wants to draft you into seeing "Army of Darkness," flee to Canada.

"Army of Darkness," was produced Robert Tapert and directed by Sam Raimi. The Universal release is rated R.

Personalities

NEW YORK (AP) The last election bore no fruit for Jerry Brown, so one of his campaign's inner circle is thinking of turning to vegetables instead.

The former California governor and presidential candidate was spotted Friday at the Park Slope Food Co-op, a politically correct market in Brooklyn.

Brown, 54, wearing a California Conservation Corps jacket and blue jeans, perused the fresh produce and other goods for about an hour with former campaign aide and all-around sidekick Jacques Barzaghi.

Barzaghi, wearing his trademark beret, told store managers he was considering starting his own co-op in Oakland, Calif., and asked them for advice. No word on whether Brown is in on the venture.

Members of the Brooklyn co-op are required to work there once every four weeks in exchange for discounts on health food and other items.

LOS ANGELES (AP) A hearing was set for next month to determine whether Marlon Brando's daughter, Cheyenne, should face criminal charges for allegedly punching a nurse in the face.

The informal March 8 hearing may also produce a settlement, Assistant City Attorney Peter Covette said Thursday.

Lorie Mae Kligerman, 41, said Miss Brando, 22, knocked her unconscious Dec. 20 at a Los Angeles psychiatric facility. The nurse said she suffered injuries to her face, hip and legs.

Miss Kligerman, who also filed a civil suit, told police that Miss Brando became impatient while waiting to leave the hospital and struck her.

Miss Brando has twice been hospitalized for drug overdoses and been treated at several psychiatric facilities since the 1990 killing of her Tahitian lover, Dag Drollet, and the birth of their son.

Her half-brother, Christian Brando, is serving a 10-year prison sentence for manslaughter in Drollet's death.

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) Thwarted by town officials who spiked his subdivision plans, Donald Trump wants to turn his historic Mar-a-Lago estate into a "world class" social club.

"Mar-a-Lago's almost a sacred place," Trump told members of the Palm Beach County Historical Society at a luncheon Thursday. "We want to make sure it's forever preserved."

A 150-page proposal delivered this week to town officials projects the club will attract more than 1,000 members.

Palm Beach officials declined to comment.

Trump still has a $50 million lawsuit pending against the town for rejecting his plan last year to split the 17-acre estate built in 1927 for cereal heiress Marjorie Merriweather Post into eight lots.

Town officials said that would ruin the historic character of the estate, valued now at $17.6 million.

Trump paid $10 million for it in 1985, but has complained it costs $1.3 million a year to maintain.

HOMER, Alaska (AP) Radio personality Tom Bodett is returning to the nation's airwaves with a weekly program from Alaska.

"Bodett & Co." will feature stories about "the interesting lives of ordinary people," radio station KBBI said Thursday.

KBBI said the show will begin Feb. 27 on Alaska's public radio and commercial stations elsewhere.

Bodett, 37, first reached a national audience when KBBI provided his commentaries to National Public Radio.

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) Black college athletes should refuse to play until conditions for minorities improve, filmmaker Spike Lee told an audience at Penn State.

"You have to hit them in the pocketbook," Lee said Monday. "You talk about these big football and basketball TV contracts and you have no black athletes ... it could work. It's the only way."

Lee was responding to a question about the takeover by black students of the campus telecommunications building in April 1988. Protestors demanded the administration step up efforts to recruit black students. The university called in state police, who arrested 89 of the protestors.

Nearly five years after the protest, black enrollment has increased, but only in numbers. As a percentage of the student body, it has remained nearly unchanged at 3.2 percent.

"It has to come down to economics," Lee said. "Taking over a building is not going to get it."

URBANA, Ill. (AP) After nearly a decade with fewer than one campus suicide per year, the number of suspected student suicides at the University of Illinois has jumped to five in the last three months.

UI officials said they were at a loss to explain the increase but they are taking action to prevent further deaths.

Dean of Students William Riley sent a letter last Tuesday to professors and academic administrators, asking them to be sensitive to signs of unusual strain or suicidal tendencies among their students.

The letter asked them to refer such students to the UI's Counseling Center.

"We're concerned about it, definitely," Riley said.

Before November, no UI student had committed suicide on the campus where 35,000 attend classes since the spring of 1990.

The annual suicide rate on campus had dropped to 0.7 since a suicide prevention program was initiated in 1984. That was one-third of the 2.3 annual rate recorded from 1977 to 1984, said Paul Joffe, a psychologist at the counseling center.

"This is very different from what we've been used to," Joffe said.

Riley said it isn't a particularly stressful time in the academic year, "but the reality is that it is a bad time of year, in terms of looking at numbers historically. February is a dreary, weary month."

Joffe said academic stress can precipitate a suicide, but other long-standing issues usually exist.

"Suicide is not a normal response to academic pressure, no matter how very severe it is," the psychologist said.

(AP) He has hovered at death's door many times, beginning as a young doctor.

He has experimented with transfusions, transferring death's blood from a fresh cadaver to a living volunteer. He has made nightly rounds to peer into the eyes of hospital patients at the moment they succumbed.

Jack Kevorkian no longer is a young doctor. At 64, he has looked death in the eye again and again and again. Fifteen times, he has helped death along, with lethal drugs or gas. Death no longer is his avocation or even an obsession.

Death is Jack Kevorkian's life.

And he is offended and outraged that anyone should think that what he says and does is unethical or immoral - much less criminal.

"All these silly religious nuts. All these people, they don't care about suffering humanity," says the man known as "Dr. Death."

Lawmakers say it's time to stop Jack Kevorkian.

On March 30, a new measure takes effect in Michigan that bans assisted suicide for 15 months, making it a felony while a commission studies the issue.

Kevorkian has helped 15 people die in his home state, despite efforts to thwart, punish and jail the retired pathologist.

This month, he has helped six people die - three in the past week.

He vows to assist others, even after the Michigan ban is implemented.

"After that," he says, "I get one shot." Then, he expects a trial.

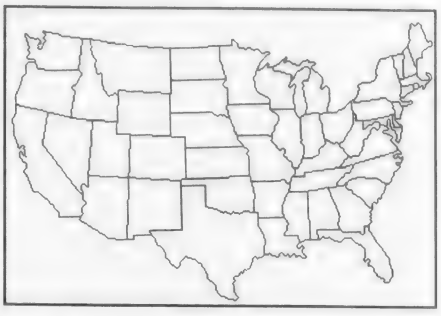
WASHINGTON (AP) Defense Secretary Les Aspin, hospitalized with shortness of breath related to an underlying heart condition, is expected to make a full recovery, his doctors say.

The doctors issued a statement Tuesday saying they had inserted a tube, or catheter, into the 54-year-old Cabinet official's heart to monitor fluid levels there and were taking daily X-rays.

They said his condition was "stable and improving" as he spent his third night in Georgetown University Hospital's intensive care unit. They said the prognosis was for a "full recovery" and they would not have reservations about his returning to his Pentagon duties when he leaves the hospital.

Aspin was admitted Sunday with shortness of breath that doctors said was triggered by a typhoid inoculation that caused a fever.

Aspin got a typhoid shot costing 35 cents that is known to cause nausea and fever rather than a newer oral vaccine, Pentagon spokesman Verne Guidry said Tuesday. The oral vaccine costs $1.90 and must be administered in four doses taken every other day.



Guidry said the use of injectable vaccine, first reported by The New York Times in today's editions, was under investigation.

Doctors said Aspin suffers from an underlying condition known as hypertrophic cardiomyopathy, a thickening of heart muscle. They said his heart skips occasional beats, which the physicians said did not appear dangerous and represented a common symptom in patients with Aspin's condition.

The doctors, whose names have not been released, issued the statement through the Pentagon after officials there met with a barrage of questions from reporters on Aspin's chances of recovery.

Aspin has been meeting daily with Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and received a phone call from President Clinton on Monday, the Defense Department said.

Senate Ethics Committee makes major changes

• There are some major changes in the Senate Ethics Committee, including its first female member. Chairman R. Bryan and the rest of the committee seem agressive in their new stance, such as no longer demanding a unanimous decision on disciplinary decisions.

WASHINGTON (AP) As the Senate Ethics Committee moves deeper into the sexual harassment case of Sen. Bob Packwood, its new leaders promise to accelerate investigations and end the panel's reputation as a procrastinator's club.

Chairman Richard H. Bryan and Vice Chairman Mitch McConnell already have ruled decisively on how the committee will investigate Packwood, R-Ore., accused by some two dozen women of making uninvited sexual advances.

And Bryan, D-Nev., has put a stop to one of the committee's most time-consuming traditions, the attempt to reach a unanimous, 6-0 vote on disciplinary decisions by the committee, which consists of three Democrats and three Republicans. Now, a majority vote will carry the day, he says.

"Procrastination is the thief of time," said Bryan, quoting the 17th and 18th Century English poet Edward Young. "We are committed to making decisions."

And plenty of tough rulings will be necessary in the Packwood case, as the committee must be fair to a senator accused of boorish behavior and protect the reputations of his female accusers.

The committee went through a housecleaning after last year. Former Chairman Terry Sanford, D-N.C., was defeated. Vice Chairman Warren Rudman, R-N.H., left the Senate. And three others wanted no part of a committee that has become a punching bag for editorial writers and, less publicly, fellow senators, over delays and punishments that some considered too soft.

The only holdover was Bryan, a freshman senator who wasted no time after his 1988 election in seizing upon a controversial issue: his plan to raise automobile fuel efficiency standards.

Two-term senator McConnell, R-Ky., also is no stranger to tough issues, is the Republicans' point man on reforming campaign finance law. He spoke for many colleagues when he mused aloud, "None of us ran for the Senate saying, 'The first thing I want to do is ... to be on the ethics committee."

The panel now includes its first woman, Democrat Barbara Mikulski of Maryland, and Sens. Thomas Daschle, D-S.D.; Ted Stevens, R-Alaska and Robert Smith, R-N.H.

McConnell asked the committee's critics to "see if these six members can move the docket, handle the cases efficiently and function with a minimal amount of impact on senators' times. If we can do that my guess is there will be fewer complaints."

He described fellow committee members as "fresh to the process," but admitted: "After two years we may all be bloodied, beat up, discouraged and recommending something brand new, but I don't think that's the case at the outset."

In its first substantive meeting in the Packwood case, the committee adopted a permanent rule that prohibits consideration of any witness' sexual history.

And for Packwood's case specifically, the committee said the investigation would look at allegations by some of the women that Packwood tried to discredit them to keep them from going public.

The committee has been battered by criticism for its interminable investigations - some two years in the case of five senators tied to thrift owner Charles H. Keating Jr., and only slightly less time in other cases.

Last year, as a rank-and-file member, Bryan ended the tradition of seeking a consensus.

He publicly announced he was the lone dissenter in committee findings that rebuked Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., for failing to disclose more than $42,000 in gifts.

"I felt the findings should be stronger," he said. "I guess the significance of that is, historically, the committee sought unanimity and that was not achieved in the case.

McConnell added, "I have not yet concluded ... that this committee can't function efficiently and fairly. And so I'm not one of those who has concluded that we cannot successfully judge our own."

Clinton seeks support from pivotal Democrats

• President Clinton, sharply criticized by the GOP for his proposed military budget cuts, finds himself having to woo pivotal Democrats, such as Virginia's Chuck Robb.

WASHINGTON (AP) President Clinton thinks the nation can get along with an even smaller military, but selling that notion to his fellow Democrats in Congress may not be easy.

Hampering his sales campaign is a dearth of top Pentagon officials who could be called upon to push his budget-cutting proposals.

In a private Pentagon breakfast meeting with Defense Secretary Les Aspin last week, two influential lawmakers expressed "deep reservations" about the planned cuts, said a participant in the session, speaking on condition of anonymity. The two, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa., are among the lawmakers Clinton will need to shepherd his defense budget through Congress.

Clinton has not said yet exactly what he would cut, so the questions from Nunn and Murtha centered on that question and how the Defense Department would continue to pay for its people, especially in light of Clinton's proposal to cut $36 billion in fiscal 1997 and $39 billion in fiscal 1998.

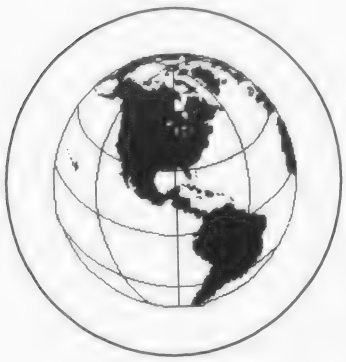
Clinton's cuts are far higher than the $80 billion to $85 billion Nunn advocated last March for the five-year period. Even Aspin, as chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, backed a smaller cut of $91 billion over five years. President Bush proposed $50 billion in reductions.

Ironically, Democrats have complained in recent years that presidents have proposed too much money for defense. Now, with a Democrat in the White House, there have been relatively few such complaints.

With Republicans unlikely to lend much support, Clinton will need Democratic votes to win his program.

Consider Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va.

Some $18 billion in defense cuts would come from a four-year wage freeze on civilian and military personnel, a tough pill for Robb and his large military constituency to swallow..



Another 1994 candidate, Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., testified last week on behalf of a nominee to the base closure commission.

Clinton turns efforts to foreign affairs

• Airdrops of food and supplies to needy Bosnia eminent, but Clinton refuses to announce his decision on this matter. However, his stance on defense cuts has many Republicans and Democrats up in arms.

WASHINGTON (AP) President Clinton is turning his attention to world affairs following a two-day West Coast trip where he touted plans to spend billions of dollars creating high-technology jobs and promised help for the troubled aerospace industry.

Sounding hoarse and looking worn from the visit to California and Washington state, Clinton returned to the White House early this morning. He planned an afternoon meeting with U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali.

Topping the agenda was the possibility of U.S. airdrops of food and supplies to needy areas in Bosnia. The president said he had made no final decision on the airdrops, but administration and Pentagon officials said the flights were almost certain.

Asked Monday if airdrops would be made, Clinton said, "It's a possibility. I want to wait a couple more days before I announce a policy on it."

Clinton also planned to discuss Somalia with Boutros-Ghali. He was noncommittal about a statement by U.S. special envoy Robert B. Oakley, who accused the United Nations of stalling plans to take over peacekeeping duties in Somalia.

"Before I use that characterization, I better talk to Mr. Boutros-Ghali, but I think the plan should be fully effected," Clinton told reporters aboard Air Force One.

The president plans to meet Wednesday with visiting British Prime Minister John Major.

But Clinton's attention Monday was not on foreign affairs. Clearly enjoying the campaign-style trip to the Silicon Valley in Mountain View, Calif., and the Seattle area, Clinton gave his economic program the hard sell.

"I can't promise you overnight miracles. We didn't get into this fix overnight," he told Boeing Co. workers in Everett, Wash.

He blasted European subsidies for hurting U.S. aircraft manufacturers and promised "tough new discipline" to respond to them in the future.

Boeing last week announced it was eliminating 27,000 jobs by mid-1994.

Clinton blamed some of the layoffs on competition from Europe's Airbus Industrie, a consortium that enjoys the support of government subsidies and that competes for world markets with Boeing and other U.S. plane makers.

Although Clinton stopped short of advocating direct government involvement in such consortia, the technology program he outlined Monday calls for government assistance to "industry-led" joint efforts.

The president also met with aerospace industry executives and touted a bill before Congress that would establish a commission to quickly recommend ways to help the industry.

Both West Coast stops were designed to focus attention on a new technology package drawing together many elements Clinton proposed during the campaign and in last week's economic package. Aides said the package would cost $17 billion to $20 billion over the next four years.

Tax breaks and "peace dividend" money from scaled-back defense spending would be used to implement the new strategy.

The initiative earmarks at least $550 million in the current fiscal year to focus government attention and assistance on high-tech non-defense programs, particularly in environmental technology, communications, computers and education.

The package was unveiled during a tour of Silicon Graphics Inc. Vice President Al Gore explained the program to company workers.

It brought immediate scorn from Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas. "The taxing Clinton-Gore administration is determined to make defense its sacrificial lamb," Dole said in a statement.

He said that, while promising defense workers high-wage, high-skill jobs, Clinton "is also going all out to toss those very same workers on the unemployment line, whether they are defense workers in California or airplane workers in Washington and Kansas."

Chinese economy booms last year

BEIJING (AP) The world's most populous nation is on an economic tear - one year after a frail Deng Xiaoping hobbled back into public view to give his endangered capitalist-style reforms one more shove forward.

While the West struggled with recession last year, China's economy grew by more than 12 percent, changing urban skylines forever with new hotels, office skyscrapers and luxury apartments.

Foreign businessmen invested a record $30 million a day.

Real incomes rose so that conspicuous spending has emerged in Communist China, creating a market for imported lingerie and luxury cars.

All of this has led to talk that China's economy could be among the world's largest - if not the most modern - by early next century.

So why do Chinese officials seem a bit nervous?

"This kind of fast pace is clearly difficult to maintain. If not handled correctly, it will bring inflation and other unhealthy consequences," the authoritative Economic Daily observed.

Grumbling about prices already is common in Beijing, as is concern over spiraling inflation.

"My income can't keep up," said Wang Qie, 38, who supplements her $70-a-month factory job working at a cigarette stall. "I don't dare eat meat, it's too expensive."

No wonder the hot topic among officials is "overheating," reflecting concern that an economy growing too fast could spin out of control, igniting inflation and exacerbating chronic corruption..

The question is whether China can maintain stable growth or is doomed to continue its boom-and-bust history.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) _ With floats inspired by crime and the numbers racket, the wild Carnival celebration hit its peak Monday with the first of two days of samba parades in Rio.

President Itamar Franco unexpectedly attended a parade in Recife in northeastern Brazil and was jubilantly hailed by revelers.

City authorities have cracked down on full frontal nudity in recent years, but most women parade in skimpy, sequined, silk-and-feather costumes, and not a few march topless.

The biggest controversy has been stirred by the Caprichosos de Pilares club, whose theme this year is the competition between the city's poor North Zone and wealthy South Zone. The group's centerpiece is a float showing a tourist being held up by a street punk while a tranvestite looks on.

Among those in Rio for the party were film director Francis Ford Coppola and actor Robert De Niro.

Carnival fever was also on the loose across the rest of this continent-sized country.

MOSCOW (AP) President Boris Yeltsin, in an interview published Tuesday, said Russia no longer views any country as its enemy but still needs a strong military, and he appealed to the armed forces for loyalty.

"We do not consider any nation or group of nations, East or West, to be our adversary," Yeltsin said in an interview with the military newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda.

Russia needs a leaner and more mobile army to cope with the growing threat from small-scale, regional conflicts, Yeltsin said. The danger of worldwide conventional or nuclear war has decreased, he said.

Yeltsin is expected to lay a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, and war veterans are slated to gather outside the Bolshoi Theater.

These are difficult times for Russia's once-fearsome military. The army has shrunk by half - to about 2.5 million soldiers - amid budget cuts and rampant draft evasion.

But Yeltsin lashed out in Tuesday's interview at critics "who label themselves 'the biggest patriots' and take it upon themselves to decide who is and who is not a patriot."

N.O.W.* is here to help you. Come to an interest meeting Thursday, 7:30 p.m. in the Nottoway Room of the Student Union. All are welcome.

LC seeks 6th trip to NCAA playoffs

Baseball Lancer's start today

As Longwood baseball coach Buddy Bolding evaluates his team's chances for having another outstanding season, he has some pluses and some minuses to consider. How the final tally will balance out won't be known until well into the season which starts today at Francis Marion.

The Lancers have made back-to-back trips to the NCAA Playoffs while compiling a 73-17 record over the past two seasons. Longwood, 32-9 a year ago, was eliminated from the playoffs in the North Atlantic Regional Tournament.

The Lancers led NCAA Division II in team batting (.378) and runs per game (10.5) while setting school records for homers (86) and RBI (375) last season. On the plus side, Bolding has 11 experienced players back from the 1992 squad. On opening day he'll likely have seven veterans on the field and four returning pitchers to choose from.

In the minus column, Bolding has to replace shortstop Mike Tucker, catcher Scott Abell and outfielders Chris Porter and John Hutzler. Abell and Tucker, a starter on the Olympic team last summer, are now with the Kansas City Royals organization. Porter will be serving as a student assistant coach with the Lancers this spring. Hutzler elected not to return to school for his senior season. Last year the four combined for 45 homers, 180 RBI's and 191 runs.

Longwood also faces perhaps its toughest schedule ever. In addition to games with Shippens- burg and Slippery Rock, ranked 12th and 18th in the Collegiate Baseball preseason Division II poll, the Lancers will play Francis Marion (ranked 26th), Lock Haven, Bloomsburg, Gannon, Norfolk State, Wofford, Mercyhurst and Shepherd, plus Division I Liberty.

"It will be an interesting year," says Bolding. "We have what I consider to be a high risk, high reward schedule. If we can play outstanding baseball early we could have a good season. We'll have super leadership from a fine group of seniors, but the new people will have to step up to help replace our losses."

Seniors set for the starting lineup include third baseman Terry Taylor, center-fielder Shawn Jones, and first baseman/designated hitter Todd Bowman.

Additional senior leadership will come from pitchers Kyle Weaver and Wyatt Flippen. Another senior hurler, Brent Willard is back on the team after a two-year absence.

Taylor, a three-year starter, batted .356 with nine homers and 40 RBI last season. Bowman hit .318 with seven homers, seven doubles and 35 RBI, and Jones stole 22 bases in 23 attempts, batted .303, hit nine homers and drove in 23 runs.

Weaver, 7-3 last season, has a career record of 18-5. Flippen, a lefthander, was 5-0 in 1993. Taylor, Weaver and sophomore second baseman Jeff Toms, the likely starter at shortstop, will serve as captains for the Lancers. Toms, the leadoff hitter, hit .386 with six homers, 24 RBI and 42 runs last season.

Other veterans expected to start include: junior Billy Reeves in left field or at first base, sophomore Brian Bassett in right field and sophomore Chris Tyson at second base. Reeves batted .350 last year with several game-winning hits. Bassett, who started 24 games in '93, hit .387 with eight doubles and two homers. Batting .407, Tyson had six doubles and drove in 32 runs.

Bolding expects Reeves and Jones to be two of the key players for Longwood. Reeves, the only left-handed hitter in the lineup, worked hard on the weights over the off-season. He could have a major impact on the team if he plays well, according to Coach Bolding.

"Shawn (Jones) will be batting clean-up and playing center field for us," said Bolding. "He has the potential to have a superlative season. He has dedicated himself to having a great senior year and I believe he may do it."

Other Lancer veterans include sophomore catcher Ray Roddy , who played in 15 games last season, and sophomore left-handed pitcher Bart van Zoest. Van Zoest had a 5-1 record and a 4.61 earned run average last season.

Freshmen who may start include catcher Matt Martinez and outfielder Mike Madden. Martinez set a Shoreham-Wading River High School record with a .417 career batting average. He also had a record 42 RBI's in one season. Madden was an all-area and all-district pick at Handley High. He holds Handley career marks for stolen bases, hits and runs.

Additional newcomers lending talent and depth to the squad are senior pitcher Adrian Holland, freshmen pitchers Jason Gross and Greg Goodlin, and freshman second baseman Chris Hatcher.

Longwood, ranked 20th in last year's final Collegiate Baseball Division II poll, is not ranked in this year's preseason poll. Bolding, however, feels he'll have another strong team.

"We should have excellent team speed, good power, improved pitching and a steady defense," said the coach. "We should have a strong bench as well."

Bryan Hartley

Sophomore wins regional wrestling crown

Hartley player of the week

Longwood sophomore Bryan Hartley, 158-pound champ and Most Outstanding Wrestler at the NCAA II Southeast Regional Sunday , has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period Feb.14-21. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

Hartley, who came into the regional with a 12-12 record, beat Dentron Eason of Norfolk State 13-6 and Scotty Allen of Pembroke 7-4 in the finals to take the regional crown at 158 pounds. He was voted Most Outstanding Wrestler in the championship by the coaches. The NCAA regional was held in Pembroke, N.C. at Pembroke State University.

By winning the regional, Hartley and three other Lancer wrestlers qualified for the NCAA II Nationals in Brookings, S.D. March 5-6. It will be Hartley's first trip to nationals. Now 14-12 for this season, he's 25-23 in his career.

Lancer coach Steve Nelson was impressed by Hartley's showing.

"Bryan wrestled the best he has wrestled all year," said the coach. "He really turned it on when he had to."

Earlier this season Hartley won the Virginia State title at 158 pounds and the Washington & Lee Invitational crown at 167 pounds. A sociology major, Bryan is a graduate of York High School. He was all-state in his junior and senior years. He was preceeded at Longwood by his brother Doug, who won a Virginia State title in 1988 at 190 pounds.

LC rips Ferrum, UDC

Lancer cagers up win total to 17

Nearing the end of its best season in four years, Longwood's men's basketball team dispatched nationally-ranked Ferrum 100-66 Saturday at home and District of Columbia 84-69 Monday night on the road to move its season mark to 17-9 with one game left.

Senior Bryan Weaver and junior Michael Druitt powered the Lancers' comeback win at UDC Monday night. Trailing 40-39 at halftime after six 3-pointers by the Firebirds, Longwood used a late 13-2 surge to put away UDC.

Longwood seniors Weaver and Laster celebrated their final home basketball games in style Saturday afternoon in Lancer Hall, combining for 47 points as the Lancers ripped Dixie Conference regular season champ Ferrum 100-66.

Weaver had 26 points and Laster 21 as the Division II Lancers cruised to victory after leading 42-34 at the half.

"All the good things that took place could be attributed to our defense in the second half," said Lancer coach Ron Carr. "We did a real nice job in a zone defense and made some things happen that created a lot of easy baskets. It was a pretty fitting end to a fine career for both Bryan and Chuck. I was really pleased that they played so well in their final home game."

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME

Litton tops 1,000 career points

Lady Lancers split with Converse, Wofford

Longwood's women's basketball team traveled to Spartanburg, S.C. this past weekend and split a pair of games with Converse and Wofford to bring its record to 7-18 on the season. The Lady Lancers beat Converse 82-66 Saturday night before dropping a 91-76 decision to Wofford Sunday afternoon.

Against Converse, the Lady Lancers trailed 10-9 just 3:51 into the contest before running off 21-straight points en route to an amazing 32-1 blitz which gave Longwood a commanding 40-11 lead with 8:19 left in the opening half. Litton, who entered the game needing just 15 points for 1,000 in her career, easily reached it with 22 first-half points. Litton surpassed 1,000 points with a steal and jumper in the lane at the 8:56 mark.

"Ana has achieved a milestone in her career at this point," commented coach Shirley Duncan. "She has been the anchor for our team this year."

Ahead 54-31 at the intermission, LC was outscored by the hosts 25-13 to start the second half as Converse closed within 67-56 with 8:36 remaining. Litton answered with two jumpers and a pair of free throws to help Longwood regain control down the stretch.

"We played an excellent first half," commented Duncan. "We were able to stop their run in the second half and rebuild our lead."

Fatigue took its toll on Longwood against Wofford Sunday as the Lady Lancers couldn't keep pace with the 22-4 Lady Terriers. Behind 26-19 with 6:02 left until halftime, LC saw Wofford outscore them 16-1 to open up a 42-20 advantage at the 1:55 mark.

The Dawgs extended their lead to 60-35 with 15:17 remaining in the game before a 17-7 Lady Lancer run narrowed the margin to 67-52 with 9:37 to play. The hosts regrouped to lead 81-58 but LC refused to quit and cut the lead to 87-76 before some late free throws provided the final margin.

Litton, with just two points at halftime, finished with 17 points for the game, as did Hillgaard. Philbrick added 14 points and Owens grabbed a game-high 17 rebounds giving her 36 boards for the weekend. Hillgaard and Philbrick each had nine rebounds while Bradley tacked on eight points with four assists. Dellinger contributed seven points and seven rebounds.

"We were definitely tired from the night before," said Duncan. "We had trouble with their press and their intense defense took us out of our half-court game."

Through 25 games, Litton is scoring 22.4 ppg. and was ranked 10th in NCAA Division II scoring in the Feb. 10 issue of The NCAA News with a 22.5 mark through Feb. 7. Litton now has 1,031 career points at Longwood, ninth on the all-time list. Litton adds 6.0 rpg. and also tops the squad with 86 assists, 79 steals and 44 three-pointers.

Longwood closes its season Saturday at Lincoln Memorial in a 1 p.m. contest.

ZTA celebrates "snowbunny" tradition

By Lisa Llewellyn
Rotunda Staff

On the morning of Friday , February 26, the temperature was freezing cold, the ground was covered in snow, and the members of Zeta Tau Alpha were out posing for a photograph in their bathing suits.

The event is known as the ZTA Snowbunny tradition.

Holly Asbury, a senior member of Zeta Tau Alpha , said "It's a tradition of Alpha Chapter of ZTA to take our snowbunny picture on the first big snowfall of the year. We haven't had this opportunity since 1989."

Heather Runyon added, "It was exciting to carry on the tradition that has been done for 28 years. Hopefully the ZTAs here will carry on the tradition forever."

When asked how it felt to go out into the snow in nothing but a swimsuit, the general consensus was that everyone was so nervous and excited that they did not notice the cold.

Melanie McCoy, a new pledge, said "it was embarrassing and funny- a new experience."

An aspect of the snowbunny tradition that the women of Zeta can count on, is being a target for many flying snowballs, coming from the hands of many fraternity men. A few of these men commented on their opinion of the tradition.

Associate member of Tau Kappa Epsilon, Jim Monihan, said "It's fun for them and fun for us, so I have no problem with it."

Chris Friedman, a brother of Delta Tau Chi, commented that "It's a fun tradition that makes ZTA different from the rest."

There were a few contradicting opinions about whether or not the scheduled time of the event should be made public knowledge.

Rob Postel, an associate member of Pi Kappa Phi said, "It's a unique tradition that should be kept secret so people can anticipate when the event will happen." Mark Ferraro, a founding father of Phi Kappa Tau said, "It's a great tradition— just let the time be known."

For those that missed it, the tradition was also broadcast over the Richmond News.

SGA Senator Mauldin impeached; acquitted

By Mindy Oakes
Rotunda Staff

The major topic of new and old business for the Student Government Association has been the impeachment process of the Junior Class President, James Mauldin. This issue has lingered on for the past four weeks and the President of Student Government Association (SGA) has been on the case and taking care of all the correspondence during this period.

Some time in September Mauldin submitted a letter explaining his absences and his strong disapproval towards having the time and date changed of the occurrence of the SGA meetings . In a later letter sent to the Student Senate, Mauldin also made comments about the "flagrant misuse of power" that Wells displayed .

In the more recent letter to SGA, Mauldin went on to say that he "would entertain anybody's thoughts on this subject (Mauldin being excused from the meetings) at the next meeting, on whatever day Mr. Wells might decide that should be."

Several meetings passed and Mauldin still did not show up; however, he did try to get the secretary of the Junior Class to attend the meetings in his place temporarily, though this effort fell through because the secretary had other obligations that he had to uphold.

On February 23, Julie Lindsay, Vice President of the Junior Class, attended one of the meetings and spoke out saying that she feels that something should have already been done and that the Junior Class is suffering in the long run without any guidance or support.

It was at the same meeting that the SGA decided that Wells was to send a letter of notice to Mauldin. The letter stated that "on February 18, a motion was made and seconded which stated that the Article VII, Section 2 of the Student Government Association Constitution does grant the SGA the right to not only remove a person's voting privileges, but the SGA shall also remove the person's position or title."

It was also stated in the letter that if he wanted to defend himself that he should be present to the next meeting.

The letter closed by stating the responsibilities of a senator and how their absenteeism policy worked and also that SGA was aware of the first two excuses for the meetings, but that by no means did it excuse him for the past six meetings .

In rebuttal to the letter that Darrell Wells mailed to James Mauldin, Mauldin did in fact write a letter back to SGA. Mauldin was criticized by some members of the Senate for the harshness of the tone of his letter, as well as the personal attacks made on the SGA President himself.

The letter was submitted by a representative of Mauldin, and SGA reviewed it and discussed all the facts of the situation. In the letter , Mauldin said he informed the entire Senate of his inability to attend meetings if the meetings were to be changed from Sunday evenings to Tuesday.

Mauldin also said that on the times he spoke to Darrell Wells outside of the meetings about his situation he given the impression that Wells understood.

Mauldin continued to comment on Well's "recent amnesia about this situation,", Mauldin recalls making a long distance phone call in December explaining to Wells about him being ordered by his ROTC unit to attend a training school in Oklahoma from 03 January through 15 January.

This was Mauldin's explanation for missing the meeting the first week of semester.

The closing of the letter stated that he was sorry for not being present at the meeting in which the letter was being presented, but said that this was his last week of wrestling practice.

At the meeting of March 16th, this issue was discussed at great length and many of the Senators questioned Mauldin about his involvement with the class and his response was that he felt the Junior Class was burnt out . A Senator, Rebecca Fordham, stated that it is his job as a President to make a difference as well as changes on campus with your class, furthermore he should try to motivate his classmates to become more involved.

Another Senator, Glenn Baron, spoke out and she believes that communication with your class it very important and should be of utmost importance to the leaders of a class.

Overall, the Senators felt that a lot of people are involved, but once you make a commitment your obligated to make to the meetings.

The final discussion of the impeachment of Mauldin came down to the fact that the only thing SGA can do as stated by the constitution is to vote to remove him from his voting privileges, but allow him to remain Class President.

SGA voted to let him keep his seat on the Senate, reasoning that there was a great deal of miscommunication in the entire process.

However, the SGA Constitution states in Article VII. Section 1 that,"any member of the SGA may be removed from their position if "one fifteenth (1/15) of the student body petition the Student Senate for a recall election, or a majority of the Student Senate vote for a recall election; and two-thirds (2/3) of the student body vote in favor of removing the member."

SGA Senate Chair and Vice President John Boroweic stated that if Mauldin missed another meeting, his personal feelings were that Mauldin's record was completely clean and that all tallies of absences would begin fresh, ignoring all of Mauldin's earlier absences.

Student conference nurtures leadership potential

By Judith Weller
Rotunda Staff

Zav Dadabhoy, Longwood's Student Development Educator, will be in charge of the second annual Emerging Leaders Conference. This conference will take place on April second and third.

This will be an attempt to educate students more efficiently on how to manage leadership positions. Throughout its duration, the conference will include sessions on building organizational skills, speakers, group activities, and various workshops.

The cost to participate in the Emerging Leaders program will be ten dollars for those students who have been chosen to attend.

In order to attend, students must be nominated by advisors, faculty members, orientation leaders, seminar leaders, organizational leaders, Resident Assistants, or their peers.

The applications for those students who get nominated and are interested in attending can be found at the Student Development Office.

Dadabhoy expects approximately 100 students to attend.

This is the first time he will be in charge of this program which has been successful in the past. He is very energetic and excited to put a new format he has been working on to work for the Conference.

Dadabhoy believes that there are a lot of things that need to be done for the student body, by the student body. These workshops are targeted towards providing the opportunity to learn leadership skills correctly.

Unfortunately, even though most people think they can assume leadership positions by desire alone, he says, there are a lot of leadership skills one learn as they go along.

Dadabhoy also stressed that leadership skills are not usually skills individuals are born with.

These workshops are also created to encourage sophomores, freshman, minorities, and women to assume leadership roles.

The point of this encouragement is to broaden the leadership pull of these groups of students.

While the location is still undecided, Dadbhoy speculates that all these activities will take place in Lankford Student Union.

ARC fountain stirs controversy

By Debbie Wilson
Rotunda Staff

One of the last of t he campus beautification projects is the creation of a fountain in front of the Academic Residence Community (ARC).

This fountain, designed along with the residence hall, is cross-shaped and will be filled with jets spraying water up to varying levels.

According to the Vice President of Business Affairs' office, this latest project is estimated to cost $200,000.

The funding will include the lights, shrubbery, and landscaping as well as the fountain itself. This new fountain is comparable t o the one in front of the dining hall, which also cost $200,000.

Many people, including faculty, staff, and students, have voiced their complaints about spending so much money on another campus beautification project, when it could be put to use for academics and salaries, among other things.

One student, a resident of ARC, started a petition to halt the construction of the fountain. He liked the aesthetic aspect of it, but had a list of alternative uses for the money, such as the renovation of French and South Tabb, and better desks in the classrooms.

But the money used to build the fountain came from a revenue bond fund, sold by the state and approved by the General Assembly, which was designated for beautification projects only. In other words, it can't be used for any other purpose.

The fountain is finished but won't be filled until the entire area, including benches and landscaping, is complete. The completion date is set for April 15th.

PERSPECTIVES

Lankford fails to serve its purpose

Lankford Student Union celebrated its 25th Birthday this week, and kicked off the ceremony by a nice "ribbon cutting" ceremony, a speech by Student Union Director Joan Mason and from President Dorrill. The ceremony included music, a birthday cake, drinks, give-away glasses and (yes!) even 25 year old issues of the Rotunda that informed the Longwood Community about Lankford's dedication 25 years ago. Some nice touches, a nice ceremony, and some all around good cheer. Congratulations!

But lets not get carried away! There was one thing conspicuously missing from the entire program. Students. You know, the folks for whom this building exists! Sure the speeches were nice, but the whole thing seemed like some type of staff meeting at which the administration from Ruffner somehow got lost and found their way to Lankford for a polite gathering, and to pat each other on the back. (By the way, there were no faculty either).

This ceremony is symptomatic of the way the Student Union serves the student body. OK, we are not really in the business of administering the Union, nor are we Student Union professionals, but even we can see that this neat building is really not set-up to cater to student needs all throughout the year. Instead of a thriving hub of student activity, the Union is filled with huge "echo-chambers" that wait to be used for student programs occasionally. And one can only wonder what the building would do in terms of student traffic if the Post Office was in another building.

In our opinion there is much that can be done to make Lankford into a real "Student" Union, and we don't have to wait till the State pours in oodles of money for a major remodeling project.

Don't get us wrong, we love our Lankford, but would love a Lankford Student Union even more if:

1. Administration would figure out a way to strike a balance between meeting room space, programming room and student living room space. Use innovative and flexible approaches to maximize the building's potential. We cringe when we compare our paltry facilities to those at VCU, Tech., or U of R. Don't give us excuses, just do it.
2. Make space available for student organizations. Its pathetic to see our SGA crammed in an office no larger than a coat closet. Student organization offices create programmatic efficiency, and generate much needed activity. Don't give us excuses, just do it.
3. Expand the Leadership Resource Center (LRC).... Advertise it more, teach folks how to use it's facilities, get more equipment such as scanners, computers, color printers, copiers, etc. Don't give us excuses, just do it.
4. Expand student access to these facilities. Expand hours of access, let students use the space in the evenings, late nights, etc. Let student leaders use the LRC after hours on occasion. Make it what was promised to students. Don't give us excuses, just do it.
5. Continue to improve programmatic use of rooms with an expanded film and comedy series, regular dances, more lectures, etc... It amazes us that Lankford has to compete with other "echo-chambers" such as Wygal, etc., for use of space for lectures, etc. Don't give us excuses, just do it.
6. Make Lankford a more civil place for all. Make it handicap accessible. Improve the Information Desk's Services so they really have information that can be given out when students need it (Yes, even on the weekends during off-times such as Spring Break - remember Meningitis Weekend? Or the Blizzard of the Century Weekend?) Don't give us excuses, just do it.
7. Have a professional staff person always at hand. How often do students come looking for a professional student affairs person or secretary, and find that they are all "gone to lunch" or the other side of campus, or merely absent! Don't give us excuses, just do it.

Lankford is a building with a great deal of potential, potential that is largely ignored at this point. Let's give the student body what they both need and deserve — not excuses, but a building that they can actually use.

Point of View

Student focus should be on more important issues

By Chris Young
Opinions Editor

Enough is enough!

All these insults flying back and forth between greeks and non-greeks is a big waste of the students' efforts. I do not like what greek oraganizations stand for, but I also understand that it is a person's choice to join. So no one has the right to ridicule anyone else for the choice that another person makes, good or bad.

Anyway, I have a bigger problem that effects all students on this campus. Safer sex has been discouraged by your parents.

In the past, condoms were passed freely on campus by student health, but when the parents of the students heard of this news, they formed a group to stop this action. Their reasoning was they felt that their tax dollars should not go toward providing this service to their children.

I am only guessing that they believed that their "kids" were not doing anything like that at our age, or I suppose they believed that by taking away the condoms they were taking away the chance for their "kids" to have sex.

We must pull together, all of us, to petition to negate the parents of the past blind, poor, ignorant, foolish decision and try to make this campus provide safer sex for the students.

I know that the majority of persons having sex do not use any kind of contraception at all when having sex. One reason may be because students do not have money for these items, so they proceed without them.

By providing the free condoms the students, they would not have to worry about purchasing them from the vending machines or from the local stores. It ruins the moment if two people are in the heat of passion and they have run to a machine or to a store. By the time one person gets back the other one could no longer be in the mood, someone may come to visit, or if one's encounter happens to be at night, the other person could have fallen asleep.

If they are passed out for free a student may pick them up any time, not just when the student has money.

Now you can get condoms from your R.A.'s, but once again money rains over all. The condoms passed out to all the students are among the worst condoms to use. According to the information given to Peer Helpers, the condoms being passed out are right down at the bottom next to the worst kind: Trojans.

The top three are: Gold Coin, then Lifestyles Extra Strength Lubricated, and Saxon (the ones passed out in the paper last semester). Lubricated condoms are better than non-lubricated ones, but these are the overall best.

Everyone needs to pressure the campus to pressure thestate government and the financial supporters of the college to redirect funds toward purchasing the best condoms for the students of this campus.

Look — everyone knows that people are not going to stop having sex. The rapid spread of AIDs shows that to be true, especially when it comes to the most sexually active age group. At least we could set an example for everyone to follow, including the parents who caused this disaster in the first place.

One last point before I leave. If everyone is worried about the spread of AIDs and the government is pushing for higher education then why have they not directed their time and our money toward these efforts already?

ELLEN GOODMAN

The shocking part is that so few people were actually surprised. When they heard that Michael Griffin, dressed in his Sunday best, armed with a .38 caliber revolver, had gone down to the clinic and shot Dr. David Gunn in the back, it was as if the other shoe had dropped.

It was inevitable, said a pro-choice leader who heard about the murder. It was just a matter of time, said a doctor-legislator in Florida. I'm surprised it didn't happen before, echoed a colleague.

Had we all been waiting beside the escalator, watching the violence rise, unable to stop it? First came the shouting at the clinic door, then the harassment. The assaults on clients with pickets and then pickled fetuses. The telephone calls from men taking down license plates in the parking lots. The counselor who found her cat decapitated.

Then the death threats. The stalkings. The fire bombings in Texas. The foul-smelling acid sprayed into clinics in California. The shotgun that wounded two in a clinic in Missouri. And finally — well, of course, what else did you expect? — murder in Florida.

The right-to-life movement was surely no more to blame for the death of Dr. Gunn than Muslims were for the bombing at the World Trade Center. But it was no less to blame than the person who put Dr. Gunn's face and address and telephone number on a most-wanted poster. No less to blame than Randall Terry of Operation Rescue who had told a rally that "we've found the weak link is the doctor. We're going to expose them. We're going to humiliate them."

Anyone who wants to check the fertile soil which fanaticism grows has only to listen to the leaders' responses to the assassination of the 47-year-old doctor and father of two: "While Gunn's death is unfortunate," said Don Treshman of Rescue America, "it's also true that quite a number of babies' lives will be saved."

While it is wrong to kill, said Randall Terry, "we have to recognize that this doctor was a mass murderer."

"Praise God," said a protestor at a clinic in Melbourne, Fla., "one of the (baby) killers is dead!"

In the days ahead, we will probably learn about Michael Griffin's private demons. But will we learn how he was encouraged by those who made demons of doctors like David Gunn?

If abortion is murder, after all, then the moral arithmetic taught by this rhetoric would seem to justify killing one life to save hundreds. The 31-year-old with the "God is pro-life" bumper sticker on his car, the zealot who prayed aloud in church that Dr. Gunn would return to Jesus, had every reason to regard his act as justifiable homicide.

Rescue America, it should be noted, has set up a fund. Not for the family of the doctor, but for the family of the killer. I have often thought that the word "terrorism" is used too often and too lightly in our country to describe every sort of violence. Violence is often random. Terrorism is deliberate. Violence is personal. Terrorism is also political.

This time, however, the word terrorism, if anything, too mild. With a pro-choice president in the White House, some anti-abortion groups have ratcheted up violence. The action has shifted from making abortion illegal to making it impossible. The goal now is leave women with the right to abortion but no access to that right.

The escalation from mayhem to now murder is an attempt to rule by fear rather than by law, to win by intimidation rather than persuasion. The attack on one clinic is meant to terrorize the others. The murder of one doctor is also meant to scare the rest out of business.

The passage of the congressional bill — The Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act — would make the blockading of abortion clinics a federal crime. It would draw the line between one person's freedom of speech and another's freedom of choice.

But there is still more to be done. During the Reagan and Bush years, radical pro-life groups like Operation Rescue and Rescue America were handled with kid gloves. They were tolerated, treated like honorable protestors engaged in a civil rights argument over one of the deep moral questions of our age.

Now the law, the FBI, the new attorney general from Florida, must begin dealing with them as domestic terrorists. Terrorists as deadly as the groups that spawned the men who parked their rented van under a Manhattan skyscraper. Cultists as fanatic as the people holed up in a Waco compound.

Michael Griffin cannot just become the next, logical, step on the escalator of violence. He must be the last step.

Archeology students master prehistoric art

By Janet Batta
Rotunda Staff

During an archaeological dig last summer, Rich Bell and Scott Harris went deeper into the field of Archeology and not only excavated artifacts from the dig but ventured into a small part of the field called Experimental Archeology, which involves the manufacturing of stone tools in the style of the Indians.

Every summer for the past fourteen years, the Longwood Field School in Archeology dig located on the Appomattox River.

Artifacts dating back 6,000 to 500 years of age have been discovered on these excavations.

During the field trip, the two students decided to pursue their curiosity and actually attempt creating prehistoric Indan stone tools.

Rich Bell had been thinking and reading up on the project for about two years, and this trip over the summer gave him an opportunity and the time to follow up on his ideas.

Whenever Scott and Rich had free time or an opportunity to get away from their digging they practiced their stome tool making.

The students did not use any type of modern tool. All of the projectile points they make were chipped away from the raw material and sharpened and shaped from the points of deer antlers.

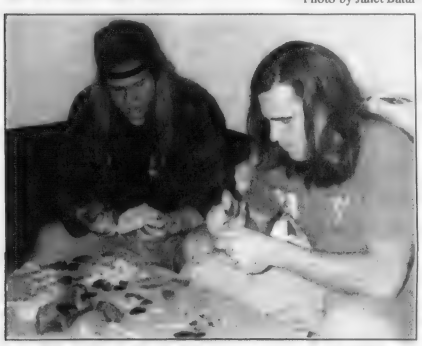
They used the base of the antler for a hammer to chip the pieces away along with various size rocks.

There were may different types of rock they used to create the points. The most readily available material in this area is quartz, but the most commonly used materials among Indans was flint and obsidian rock.

Rick and Scott use all of these materials. It takes approximately fifteen minutes to an hour to complete one projectile point depending on the material used.

Scott Harris would like to continue to improve his technique in experimental archeology after graduation and Rich Bell plans on going to graduate school and wishes to focusing on prehistoric technology.

Rich explained that he believed modern archeologists are no longer focusing on the artifacts alone but what went into the making of the piece and how the Indian was thinking at that time.



Dr. James Jordon, Director of the Archeological Field School, is very supportive of the students wishes to experiment with tool manufacturing. He occasionally allowed the students to slip away from their daily digging and practice with their tool replications.

Many people do not get involved in the replication of stone tools because of the lack of raw materials. And this hobby isn't as safe as it sounds. The process of chipping away at the material creates small splinters of rock which can easily get caught under the skin and the e.

But this activity is not without its rewards. As those in the prehistoric stone-tool business often say, few things are permanent, but stone tools last forever.

A DISPATCH FROM SPY MAGAZINE

Electric Kool-Aid Acid Cliché By the Way, SPY Is Like The New Yorker on Psilocybin

They'll stone you when you're reading their review. Pop culturists seem to be at pains these days to describe things vividly, accessibly and quickly, and their recurring solution suggests that everybody indeed must get stoned.

Smith, Himmelman, Kahn Promise Electric Performance in Acoustic Show

By Jennie Fennell and Erin McCay
Rotunda Staff

Peter Himmelman is an underrated, very talented guitar player and singer/songwriter. His recent Flown This Acid World captures his imaginative, moving style.

This release is more powerful and electric than his previous recordings. Himmelman is joined by three musicians with whom he has played since his youth in Minnesota: Jeff Victor (keyboards, vocals), Al Wolovitch (bass), and Andy Kamman (drums). Lead guitarist Greg Herzenach and backing vocalist Kristin Mooney are also included on Flown This Acid World.

Peter characterizes his shows as being "very interactive, always trying to break down the barrier between performer and audience. When you allow yourself to be spoken to by an audience member, when you make yourself available—no matter what size crowd then you can create some kind of dialogue, then things happen spontaneously. And I always take requests."

Himmelman has also written and recorded music for Touchstone Picture's Crossing the Bridge.

Emotional in tone and superior in quality, Peter Himmelman's music is genuinely intriguing.

An earlier release of Himmelman's, From Strength to Strength, is as evocative as his latest effort. Especially good are "Love of Midnight" and "This Too Will Pass." All in all, Himmelman is an artist whose time will come, and not soon enough for us.

Darden Smith, hailing from Austin, Texas, is a promising acoustic artist whose style is catchy and somewhat mystical. He initially began as a country singer, but his style has metamorphosized into having a rock edge.

On the 1991 Columbia Release Trouble No More, Smith sings "I spent most of my life trying to wear another man's clothes / The collar's too tight, and the shoes they hurt my soul" in his song "Fall Apart at the Seams."

Brenda Kahn, from Brooklyn, New York, is an aspiring acoustic guitarist who has a truly inspirational style. Sarcastic, dark, silly, and spunky all describe Kahn's style as a musician.

Brenda's songs take us on road trips to 24-hour Dunkin' Donuts and Motel 6's. Her voice is sweet at times, rough and raw at others. Her distinctive style is clearly her own, but she has been compared to the Velvet Underground, Joni Mitchell, and the Violent Femmes. It is true —all these bands do come to mind while listening to her sing, but there are no rip-offs involved.

Kahn is an extraordinary songwriter who has been called both punk and folk, although she denies the latter.

One of Kahn's most prominent interests is women's issues, and she takes a most practical stance. "Let me just say right now that I'm not on a diet, and I don't intend to be. I try to maintain the feminine side of me and my music without being boring or bad. I decided to accept who I was, you have to go pretty deep to accept those things about yourself as a woman in this society."

Lancer Productions and Sony Music present Peter Himmelman, Darden Smith, and Brenda Kahn tonight in the Commonwealth Ballroom at 9:30 following the performance of comedian Billy Martin. Admission is free, and this is a show not to be missed. Himmelman, Kahn, and Smith are all tremendous artists in their own rights – together they are something not to be missed.

Our Town a triumph

By Gray Lipford
Rotunda Staff

Our Town, by Thornton Wilder, was produced by the Longwood Players and put on February 23-26 in Jarman Theatre. It is the story of a small, turn of the century, New England town and the people who lived there. This production is bursting with life and energy.

When the story begins, it is 1901 and, with the help of the "Stage Manager" played by John-Carl Wiese, the play centers in on the lives of two families, the Gibbs and the Webbs, particularly George Gibbs and Emily Webb.

The play looks at their daily life in Act I, the love and marriage of George and Emily in Act II, and expresses a celebration of life through death in the final act. A rather long play, it lasted two and a half hours including two 10 minute intermissions. The length of the play, however, is forgotten when viewing this production.

Under the trained direction of Melissa Johnston, this play takes wing and breathes life into the people portrayed. Not enough can be said in praise of the acting of Wiese as the "Stage Manager," TC Clark and Anne McMorrow as the "Webbs," Cindy Callahan and Joe Servus as the "Gibbs," Anthony Foley as "George," and Diana Duncan as "Emily."

"Simon Stimson," the congregational choir director and a problem drinker was very well played by Jonathon Church, who was truly outstanding.

An interesting effect was the use of a raked stage built for this performance. Also, the use of the aisles and the area in front of the stage made for interesting pictures. The lighting as well did much to convey mood.

The extensive miming required by this play was fairly well done, though a bit too rhythmical. It would have been nice to have had more sound effects to accompany the mime, as well.

The New England accents and slow speech by the actors was a nice touch and made the play easy to hear and understand. The transitions between scenes were well done but the dialogue was difficult to understand when actors talked at the same time.

Even the casting was done well, with families which looked alike enough to make one believe they were related.

Our Town as produced here is the best rendition of Thornton Wilder's classic that this reviewer has experienced.

Sale of grain alcohol to be banned in Virginia

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) Last call for grain alcohol in Virginia is July 1.

A state law passed last month by the General Assembly bans sales of grain alcohol effective in July. The law will bring to an end decades of spiking college punches with the clear, tasteless alcohol.

William V. Daniel, a Delta Phi brother and 1950 graduate of the University of Virginia, remembers a few grain alcohol parties in his day, and he says the idea of spiking punch with clear 190-proof alcohol was old hat even then.

Daniel, of Richmond, who recently stepped down as president of Virginia's Fraternity Alumni Council, believes it is a good move.

"I don't think anything will be lost by it at all," he said last week. "Grain alcohol can be pretty devastating."

Grain alcohol is colorless, odorless and virtually tasteless. It is a highly potent liquid that is 75 percent pure alcohol, and because of its strength, small amounts can be highly toxic.

The proposal to ban sales came from a task force that was formed in the wake of a drug raid on three University of Virginia fraternities in 1991. Another step recommended by the task force, the registration of beer kegs to make their purchasers easy to trace, went into effect earlier this year.

College administrators said in 1991 that grain alcohol mixed in punch is a dangerous drink. And they pointed out that most grain alcohol sales in the state took place near the Virginia and Virginia Tech campuses. The state has 245 liquor stores, but the 15 closest to college campuses accounted for 15 percent of the grain alcohol sold last year, according to Alcohol Beverage Control Board statistics.

Tops among all stores in grain alcohol sales was one not far from most University of Virginia fraternities. A close second was the ABC store in Blacksburg near Virginia Tech.

Grain alcohol sales declined drastically last year after the ABC Board reduced the proof available from 190 to 153.

But Del. Julia A. "Judy" Connally, D-Arlington, main sponsor of the legislation, said she believed the time had come simply to outlaw grain alcohol completely.

"I got encouragement from administrations all over the state that this would be a desirable thing," she said, adding that many legislators were unaware the spirits were still for sale in state stores.

Proof refers to the alcoholic strength of a beverage, and is expressed as twice the percentage present. For example, 100-proof drinks are 50 percent alcohol.

Rum and bourbon with a proof of 151 remain available, Ms. Connally said, but those drinks have a color and taste. "They're not as invisible," she noted.

Grain alcohol can be found on the shelves of liquor stores in the District of Columbia and Maryland. In Pennsylvania, a state task force studying campus alcohol abuse called last month for a ban on grain alcohol sales there.

At the University of Virginia, fraternity officials were reluctant to even cautiously discuss drinking in general and grain alcohol parties in particular.

But several said grain guzzling had been on the wane at the school's 34 fraternities, even before the legislation was passed.

"I don't think there's rampant grain parties," said Stephen Linaweaver, the newly elected president of the Interfraternity Council. "I think they are definitely declining, and you're seeing less liquor-based parties in general."

Students volunteer during spring break

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) Dozens of Virginia college students are spending their spring break in South Carolina, but they aren't at the beach.

One group is in the small Lexington County town of Red Bank, shingling a roof and hanging siding on a new house. In north Columbia, another group is putting drywall in a home, while next door others are digging the foundation for a third house.

"My roommate told me I was nuts when I told him I was going to do this," Roanoke College senior Franklin Clayton said Tuesday while shoveling rock-laden soil from a foundation trough awaiting concrete.

But Clayton and 23 others from the Salem, Va., school resisted the lure of the beach and opted to assist Habitat for Humanity, a volunteer organization that helps people buy houses.

The students, along with 32 from William and Mary College completing the Lexington County house, say those who scoff at the idea need only try it.

"And we're getting lot of sun while doing it," freshman Laurel Shroyer said as she leveled strips of siding on the front of the Red Bank house.

It's the fourth year William and Mary students have spent spring break helping build houses in South Carolina for Habitat. The Roanoke students have done it for eight years, helping local volunteers build 11 area houses.

The students said they're used to the weird looks they get when they describe their plans to classmates heading to Florida for a week of partying in the sun.

Some of the volunteers went to Florida last year, but it was no spring fling. They were there to help Homestead recover from Hurricane Andrew, just as they did in Sumter after Hugo.

Karen McNeish was among them.

"I've done four other houses, either over spring breaks or in the summer," said the William and Mary senior who majors in economics. "This is pretty different from school, being out in the sun all day and hammering and stuff. But it's really fun."

The Red Bank house, sponsored by Westminster Presbyterian Church, is the 26th the local Habitat chapter has built or rehabilitated. It is the first in Lexington County.

Residents apply for the homes, which average $30,000 to build, and are selected by a committee based on need. Monthly interest-free mortgage payments, which go toward buying materials, average $175.

In return, those selected are required to invest 300 hours of "sweat equity" in building their home and homes for others.

Clinton plan anticipated by students

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) Several South Dakota students say they are interested in a proposed community service program announced by President Clinton.

"I think it is about time that somebody thought about it," Donovan Kills-A-Hundred, a Flandreau High School senior, said Monday after Clinton outlined the pilot program.

He said he thinks Clinton is on the right track and that he will participate in the program if it's offered.

"It should have happened years ago. It can be for anybody, rich or poor. It could provide an important option for any student."

Clinton pledged to allow students to repay college loans through community work, calling his national service plan a 1990s GI Bill.

Paul Richardson of Sioux Falls, a sophomore business major at the University of South Dakota, said it sounds good, but Congress has yet to have its say.

"I think it is a nice plan in concept, but as usual, there is a big difference with concept and reality when it comes to Congress," Richardson said.

He also said the definition of public service has to be reasonable.

Lennox High School senior Laura Kroeger said Clinton's goal is good. But she wondered if it will cause problems for college graduates.

"It depends on what field you are going into," she said. "He might stick you in a cruddy little job, and you don't have the choice of going where you want to go."

Bridgewater High School senior Meredith Tusha said the program shows President Clinton wants to give everyone a fair chance to get a college education. She said she will apply for a loan and do community work if it's available.

Tusha said she hopes the new program will get rid of a problem now associated with loans: they're based on the wealth of a student's parents.

Lancer baseball team hitting .348

Longwood has 7-3-1 record

While they may not match last season's best-in-the nation .378 batting average, the NCAA Division II Longwood Lancers have started the 1993 baseball season with some pretty hot bats.

With seven players hitting .310 or better, Longwood has a team batting average of .348 and is scoring 7.4 runs per game. Winning two of three against visiting Bloomsburg last week, Longwood upped its record to 7-3-1. The Lancers, playing at their newly renovated home park, beat the Huskies 2-1 and battled to an 8-8 tie in two games Wednesday. Thursday, with ace Kyle Weaver on the mound, Longwood took a 7-5 triumph.

Leading the Longwood hit parade are senior third baseman Terry Taylor and sophomore shortstop Jeff Toms, Lancer tri-captains. Taylor is hitting .436 with six doubles, a triple, a homer and 18 RBI. He has now hit safely in 10 straight games with a team-best 17 hits.

Toms, the team's lead-off batter, is tops with a .441 average. He also leads the club in runs (12), walks (12) and stolen bases (5-5).

Also hitting well are sophomore outfielder Brian Bassett, .375, 10 runs, 7 RBI; senior Shawn Jones, .310, 8 RBI, 2 homers; senior Todd Bowman, .343, 2 homers; sophomore Chris Tyson, .353, 4 doubles, and freshman Mike Madden, .364, 8 runs. Madden missed the Bloomsburg games with a hip-pointer.

Leading the Lancer pitching staff is senior tri-captain Kyle Weaver. Going 28 innings, Weaver has a 3-1 record, an earned run average of 1.61 and three complete games. In addition, he has struck out 23 batters while walking just six.

Weaver went the distance Thursday in the Lancers' 7-5 win over Bloomsburg. He fanned seven and walked two. Only three of the Huskies five runs were earned. Bassett drove in a pair of runs for Longwood while going 2-5. Tyson also had two hits and an RBI.

Longwood also got a complete game showing from senior left-hander Wyatt Flippe in Wednesday's 2-1 win over Bloomsburg. Flippen completed a six-hit masterpiece for his first win of the season after two losses. Allowing just two Husky base runners over the final four innings, Flippen scattered six hits, walked just one and fanned six. He lowered his earned run average from 9.55 to 5.29.

Sophomore catcher Ray Roddy was the defensive standout of the series and also hit a crucial homer to back up Flippen's pitching. The catcher came up with several big defensive plays Wednesday and Thursday. He hit his game-winning homer to left field not far from the 335' sign near the foul pole.

Surprised at his own feat, Roddy admitted it was only the second homer he has hit on any level. In the three games Roddy threw out a four Bloomsburg runners and also helped snuff out two threats by blocking the plate and tagging out Huskies intent on scoring.

Before the recent winter storm, Longwood was scheduled to host Division III Randolph-Macon Monday and to head north to Shippensburg, Pa. for the Shippensburg Invitational Friday, Saturday and Sunday. It is unlikely that the Lancers will be able to play any baseball games this week because of the weather.

Junior hoopster one of 40 across nation

Litton finalist for Division II All-American

Longwood junior women's basketball player Ana Litton has been voted one of 40 finalists across the nation for the 1993 NCAA Division II Kodak All-America team announced the Women's Basketball Coaches Association (WBCA), in cooperation with Eastman Kodak Company.

Litton was voted a finalist by WBCA member coaches in District III which comprises Division II colleges in the District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia. There are eight districts across the nation with five individuals selected as finalists from each district.

Litton, who averaged 22.0 points per game this year, took over the offensive load for the Lady Lancers following the season-ending injuries to classmate Cassie Ensley. Litton led the team in scoring, assists (95), steals (83) and three-pointers (46) while establishing three new records at Longwood this season. Litton's 242 field goals, along with 18 field goals in a game and 38 field goal attempts in a game, are all new standards. Additionally, Litton equaled the mark for points in a game with the 43 against Converse, as well as equaling the standard for three-point attempts in a game with 12 on two occasions this year.

Litton scored 595 points in 1992-93, the second-best seasonal effort in school history behind former WBCA All-American Carmille Barnette's 596 in 1989-90. Litton's 22.0 scoring average also ranks second-best in a season while her 46 three-pointers is third-best and her 83 steals rank fourth-best. Litton, who also averaged 5.9 rebounds, now has 1,067 career points to rank ninth all-time and her 77 career treys is third all-time.

The Kodak All-America selection committee will conference on Thursday, March 18 to select the 10 players who will be honored as the Division II Kodak All-America team. The 10-member All-America team will be announced on Saturday, March 26 at the NCAA Division II National Championships.

Lancer Golfers first at Pinehurst

Lancer Senior Steve Crute shot 80-82-82-244 to take individual honors and Longwood came out on top in the team competition at the Pinehurst Collegiate Golf Tournament March 8-10 in Pinehurst, N.C. It was the spring opener for the Lancers, who had a school record 315.7 stroke average for the fall season.

Longwood shot 345-333-346-1024 in very windy conditions to best Hampden-Sydney (1,039) and Ursinus (1,084). Two additional teams which were entered in the tourney pulled out at the last minute. LC, H-SC and Ursinus played three Sandhill area golf Courses: Fox Fire, Wood Lake and Mid-Pines.

Freshman Eric Levin carded an 87-79-88-254 to finish second overall in the individual competition. Other Lancer scores included: junior Jimmy Ward 88-84-93-265, senior Frank Davide 90-92-86-268, freshman Jonathan Vaughn 93-88-90-271 and senior Craig Woods 94-96-99-289. Also playing for Longwood this spring, though they did not participate in the tournament, are senior John Benton, junior Shawn Moore, and freshman Chad Williams.

"Steve (Crute) was really playing well, though his scores may not show it," said coach Steve Nelson. "The wind was terrible."

Longwood was scheduled to play in the Elon College Tournament Monday and Tuesday. The Lancers' next competition is slated for March 26-28 at the Camp LeJeune Marine Tournament in Jacksonville, N.C.

Softball shines at UNCW tourney

Longwood's NCAA Division II softball team, participating in the UNC Wilmington Tournament in North Carolina, won three games last Friday to improve its current winning streak to four. The Lady Lancers, winners of six of their last seven games, defeated NCAA Division I foes George Mason 6-5 and Radford 6-3 before destroying Division II Shaw (N.C.) University 17-2 in first round play at the Wilmington, N.C. tourney. Saturday's action was cancelled due to the weather.

Longwood, in North and South Carolina all last week, now sports a record of 6-5 after dropping its first four games. The Lady Lancers lost doubleheaders to Barton (N.C.) College March 7 and Campbell (N.C.) University March 8 to open the season before sweeping a twinbill at Pembroke State (N.C.) University March 9 and then splitting with Francis Marion (S.C.) University March 10. Coach Loretta Coughlin's squad will play its next four opponents at home on the Farmville Armory Field.

UNC Wilmington Tournament

After jumping ahead early and hanging on for victory against both George Mason and Radford, the Lady Lancers exploded against Shaw in Friday's third contest. With three runs in the first inning, five in the second, seven in the third and two in the fourth, LC claimed a four inning triumph under the tournament's 15-run rule.

Junior Ana Litton paced the win with three hits (two doubles and a triple) and five RBI. Sophomore Mari Willen also had three hits (one double) with three RBI and freshman Kerri Johnson added three hits (double and triple) and two RBI. Freshman Dawn Harrison picked up her first win of the season pitching four innings allowing just three hits.

Longwood scored all six runs against Radford in the first inning on RBI singles from Willen, sophomore Crystal Barker, Johnson and sophomore Robin Hutcherson. Junior Andi Wrenn picked up her third win of the season pitching seven innings and giving up six hits and no earned runs along with four strikeouts.

Willen also paced the GMU victory with three hits including two doubles and one RBI. Freshman Emily Welpott improved to 2-3 on the mound pitching seven innings while allowing four earned runs with two strikeouts.

Longwood 4, 7: Francis Marion 5, 6

The Lady Lancers dropped the opener 5-4 in eight innings as FMU scored two unearned runs in the bottom of the extra inning. Seniors Jen Brady and Ginny Henry led LC with two hits apiece. Welpott took the loss although she allowed just four hits and one earned run.

Longwood bounced back in the nightcap behind sophomore Lorri Payne who went 3-4 with a triple while Litton (two RBI) and Johnson each contributed two hits. Wrenn pitched the victory with seven innings of work allowing just one earned run.

Longwood 8, 2: Pembroke State 7, 1

Senior Robin Jensen led LC in the eight inning opener with three hits and two RBI with Willen adding two hits and three RBI. Johnson also had two hits and an RBI. Welpott got the victory on the mound pitching eight innings with four strikeouts.

In the nightcap, Willen had two hits to lead the offense while Wrenn allowed just four hits in seven innings for the victory.

Campbell, Barton

Longwood's season got off to an ugly start as the Lady Lancers dropped doubleheaders to Barton by scores of 4-1 and 4-3 before Campbell downed LC 13-0 and 7-0. LC was limited to only three hits in each of the losses to Division I Campbell. Errors played a big role against Barton as the Lady Lancers committed five miscues.

Longwood's home doubleheader with Le Moyne (N.Y.) Tuesday was canceled and a home twinbill with Radford Wednesday will be rescheduled.

Baseball's heading in the wrong direction

By Brendan McEvoy
Sports Editor

Recently the Richmond Times Dispatch ran an article claiming that the game of baseball is heading toward new rules and regulations in order to make games shorter. The problem seems to be that the games are exceeding the alotted air time on television. They say that shortening the games will not only please the television networks, but it will attract more fans. Here are some of the proposed solutions:

—limiting the time between pitches to twenty seconds

—make the manager decide on the relief pitcher before he reaches the mound

—limit the number of trips to the pitchers mound by a catcher

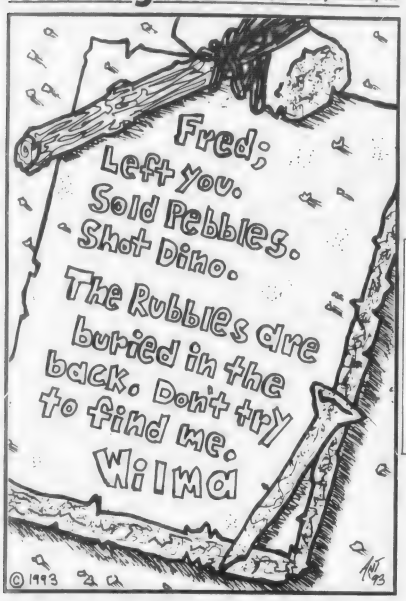
—start games at the scheduled time

Carlton Fisk has been pointed out as one of the leagues major time consumers. His routine before he steps into the batter's box takes a good thirty to fourty -five seconds. He'll readjust his batting glove, wiggle the bat, push his helmet down tightly on his head, sweep his foot over the dirt to wipe out the chalk in the back of the batters box, loosen his shirt at both shoulders, dig his back foot in, close his eyes, take a deep breath...and after all that , he will finally step in the box.

Now, the average sports fan would see this as an unnecessary, boring, time-consuming processs. Well sports fans, if this is your point of view, you have no appreciation for an art form that baseball has to offer. Yes, that's right it's an art form. Former Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn couldn't have said it better when he commented in 1976, "Baseball is beautiful...the supreme performing art. It combines in perfect harmony the magnificent features of ballet, drama, art and ingenuity."

The reason why baseball is considered our national pastime is that it represents American culture in a way no other sport can. It is the only sport that a game can, theoretically speaking, last over an infinite period of time. George F. Will, baseball analyst and political scientist, states, "It [baseball] has no clock, no ties and no liberal intrusions into the organized progression."

These routines are sometimes neccessary to get a player focused. Many major league players will see a sports psycologist in hopes of improving their play. The first thing the psychologist will tell the player to do is to go through a routine to help him concentrate and to do that routine in between each pitch. These routines vary in time and technique. Each player is different, and so each routine is unique.



Many youngsters will imitate their favorite players routine and/or incorporate it into their own routines. Art and Music students, does this sound familiar? Beethoven incorporated styles of Bach into his work. Barry Bonds incorporates styles of Willie Mays into his game.

Baseball is a game of tradition and drama. Any attempt to put a time limit on our national pastime is truly a tragedy. If baseball goes in this direction, you will see a decreasing amount of true baseball fans who appreciate the tradition and the way baseball is intended to be played— with no clock.

Kings Dominion debuts new attractions

By Gray Lipford
Rotunda Staff

Kings Dominion begins its 1993 season on Saturday, March 27 with some noticeable changes. The most major of these changes is a with ownership. Paramount Communications purchased King's Entertainment, the company which ran Kings Dominion and four other parks in the United States and Canada.

Paramount, which is a very diverse company, is best known for its entertainment division. As a producing studio, Paramount has made movies such as the Indiana Jones series, The Godfather, Wayne's World, Days of Thunder, and The Star Trek series of movies. It also produces Cheers, the Arsenio Hall Show, and Star Trek: The Next Generation.

Paramount owns Madison Square Gardens, the New York Knicks, the New York Rangers, and produces The Miss Universe Pageant. Paramount also runs the USA and Sci Fi cable networks, as well as a publishing division.

Some changes in store for Paramount's Kings Dominion include a Days of Thunder motion simulator ride for this season, as well as plans for a Top Gun roller coaster for the future. There may also be some name changes for the existing attractions.

"With seat movements synchronized to the action on the screen, this experience really is the next best thing to driving behind the wheel of a race car," according to Wilson H. Flohr, Jr., executive vice president and general manager of Paramount's Kings Dominion. "Paramount is bringing a whole new world of special effects and technology to Paramount's Kings Dominion and this gives us the freedom to create attractions that have never been seen before."

The entertainment division is undergoing some major changes. Most of the traditional shows were scrapped in favor of faster paced shows with more excitement and movement. One dancer who has worked at Kings Dominion for a number of years mentioned that last year was told to calm down on the hip action, this year "they can't get enough!"

At The Paramount, previously the Mason-Dixon Theatre, the old stage has been torn out and an ice stage has been installed for "Paramount on Ice," an ice skating show saluting Paramount movies and their memorable music.

On summer evenings, an action-packed outdoor laser show titled "The Lazer-Zone: Mission Impossible" will debut in the Hurricane Reef section of the Park. "The Lazer Zone: Mission Impossible" features laser beams which project graphic images portraying adventure scenes from well known Paramount movies and television programs such as "Mission Impossible," "Top Gun," "Beverly Hill Cop," and "Days of Thunder."

New movie characters will join the Hanna-Barbera characters at the park in 1993. "Star Trek" Klingons, Vulcans and Romulans, plus Star Fleet crew members are among the walk around characters that will be introduced when the park opens. A major touring "Star Trek" exhibit is expected to be at the park by mid-summer.

Since this is a new program, the management is not exactly sure how it is going to work, except that the actors will have a lot of freedom to make this program run the way they like, indicated Leroy Orie, the stage manager in charge of the atmosphere program.

Several Longwood students have been employed to portray some of these new characters, and an even greater number find jobs there every summer. Many more students eagerly await the opening of the refurbished park. Jim Sojka said "I've been to Kings Dominion many times over the past years and I'm looking forward to seeing the changes first hand."

Kings Dominion began in 1974 as Lion Country Safari, a preservation zoo where visitors drove their own cars through. After dishing out over $40,000 that opening year and replacing visitors' tires that were attacked by the lions, a monorail was also added.

In 1975, International Street was opened and the park has grown since then.

Lion Country Safari was opened by Family Leisure Centers, a joint venture between Top Value Enterprises and Taft Broadcasting Company. In 1980, this venture was dissolved, and Kings Dominion became solely owned by Taft.

Kings Dominion, with Carowinds in North Carolina, Kings Island in Cincinnati, and Canada's Wonderland in Toronto formed a new company in 1983 called Kings Entertainment Company, KECO. In 1989, the company purchased Great America in Santa Clara, California.

Last year Paramount purchased KECO and formed Paramount Parks. Its home office is located in Charlotte, North Carolina, and the Entertainment and Design division is in Cincinnati.

Paramount's Kings Dominion is open weekends beginning March 27 through May 30, plus open Monday, April 12 and Monday, May 31. The park is closed Sunday, May 2. It is open daily June 1 through September 6 and open weekends only September 12 through October 3. The park is closed Saturday, September 11.

Altered student ID's problematic

By Mindy Oakes
Rotunda Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) recently received a letter from the Honor Board and Campus Police informing the association that there is a problem with students faking their Longwood ID's by changing the birthday.

This issue was discussed during a recent meeting. The Honor Board and the Campus Police made a suggestion in their letter that the birthdays be removed from the ID's starting with the next class.

This has been brought to attention, because the stores in Farmville that supply alcohol allow the students to use their ID's as valid identification.

If the ID's were to be changed, the students would have to carry their drivers license at all times (especially at parties), because one would need identification with his or her birthday on it to prove being "of age."

Also, if IDs are changed, the dining service would have to totally redesign the cards so that there is no extra space to type in the birthday.

As one senator pointed out, some of the fault should be on the dining hall staff who issues the IDs, because when a student tries to obtain his or her ID., there is no system to check if student is giving the correct birthday and social security number.

The student could get the wrong birthday printed on his or her pictured ID by just simply stating it incorrectly, because it is not common to check up on this information.

After all this discussion, SGA voted no change on the ID's, but that they would be sending a letter to the Dining Hall/ARA management suggesting that security be tightened on the process of issuing new ID's, and that maybe the employees should have some kind of system that allows them to see if the given information is correct.

160 social greek pledges attend new member academy

By Heather Moulin
Rotunda Staff

On Saturday February 20th the New Greek Member Academy was held. Approximately 160 new Greek pledges representing every social Greek organization on campus attended. The event lasted from 11am to 5 pm, and it was sponsored by Longwood's Theta Chi chapter of Order of Omega.

Order of Omega is a social Greek honorary leadership society. It's members are outstanding leaders in their individual Greek chapters, as well as on campus. To be considered for membership in the society, a candidate must have at least the minimum Greek grade point average.

The society serves to encourage leadership and civility among Greeks. It also supports extra effort in the area of community service. Individual members of the society recently volunteered their time at a nearby Ronald McDonald House. The society is also sponsoring a campus beautification project this year.

The society is participating in a tree planting challenge that will involve the Greek community. All chapters will compete to see which one can raise the most money to plant more trees on campus. Another way they try to strengthen the Greek community is to offer a New Member Academy every year for new fraternity and sorority pledges.

The annual Academy's purpose is to educate new members about their roles in the Greek community. They are first encouraged to realize that their roles as student should always come first. The first activity of the day involved a panel discussion between six faculty members and the new pledges. This gave the students the opportunity to recognize some faculty perceptions of the Greek system.

The new members also watched a video taped lecture entitled "Demythologizing the Animal House Video." This lecture first helped to dispel the negative image of Greek Life that the 1970's released movie created. The lecture emphasized the fact that Greeks must work hard to change their negative image, whether it be on this campus, or anywhere else.

The final activity of the day helped the members think about what they expect out of Greek life. They were divided into groups of twelve and were asked to create the ideal fraternity or sorority. The members designed a crest, or representative symbol for their imaginary organization, and gave it a creed for its members to follow. This exercise helped the new members realize what they thought a fraternity or sorority should be or provide for its members.

For some of the participants, it was their first introduction to the sense of responsibility to community that comes along with membership in a sorority or fraternity. They had the opportunities to interact with fellow Greeks and learn from one another. Amy Kapel, Recording Secretary for Order of Omega commented that "The Academy made them [the pledges] realize that they have to be willing to be a part of the Greek ideal and uphold its sense of community, and this workshop achieved just that."

Therapeutic Recreation sponsors Special Olympics

By Susan Mazza
Rotunda Staff

On Saturday, February 20,1993, in Lancer Gym, the Therapeutic Recreation Department sponsored the Special Olympics. This year the program focused on the game of basketball and basketball skills. There was a great turn out of Longwood students and the community— enough to fill the bleachers on one side of the gym.

The day began with a parade of the 40 athletes from the Buckingham, Cumberland, and Prince Edward areas. Scott Davis, one of Longwood's basketball coaches, spoke about dreams to start the games off.

The athletes participated in individual skills such as rebounds, shooting, and dribbling. Following these competitions, there were half-court and full-court basketball games.

For those athletes that were not playing in the basketball games, there were videos to watch, Nintendo and board games to play, music to dance to, and refreshments to eat. Mc Donalds donated cheeseburgers to the athletes and volunteers.

Many organizations on campus sponsored individual teams. Some such organizations were Alpha Delta Pi, Delta Zeta, Tau Kappa Epsilon, Sigma Kappa, Sigma Sigma Sigma, Alpha Gamma Delta, and the Ambassadors. These groups sponsored their teams by cheering them on and making spirited banners and posters.

Mrs. Dorrill closed the festivities with a speech and the awards ceremony, where ribbons were given to all of the athletes. Approximately 20 of the athletes are going on to Fairfax for the state competition.

A couple of the athletes personally spoke to the spectators to thank them for coming and to tell them how much they liked participating in the Special Olympics.

Kristi Upford, a Therapeutic Recreation major that was on the publicity committee and helped out in the rebound individual skills competition, said that these personal speeches by the children were heart warming: "After going and seeing how much it meant to the athletes, it made me feel good to see so many Longwood students really participated and cared for the athletes that had disabilities."

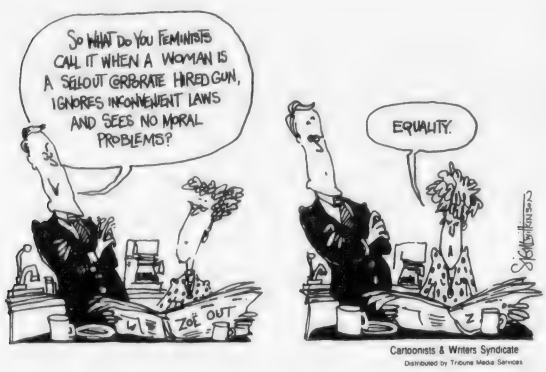
PERSPECTIVES

SGA does a superior job

We have in the past used this space to criticize a number of organizations on campus, ranging from administrative offices to the greek system to the Student Government Association. However, there are times when a group does something that is truly outstanding.

Recently, SGA has shown a level of maturity and professionalism that is quite refreshing. This was obvious in their handling of the impeachment process of SGA Senator James Mauldin.



Mauldin, President of the Junior Class, had far exceeded the number of allowable absences from SGA meetings and functions, and the Senate, acting in a completely appropriate manner, initiated impeachment proceedings against him.

Giving Mauldin what may almost be considered too much opportunity to rebut the charges (he failed to show up for a number of meetings where his presence was specifically requested), the Student Senate completed the impeachment procedure in a proper and fair manner, giving Mauldin the opportunity to (finally) present his case in person.

Ample evidence was presented, and a debate took place, and (unfortunately) Mauldin was acquitted. Though we disagree with the final outcome of the impeachment (citing a lack of communication, Mauldin was allowed to remain in office, which in our opinion was a poor decision), a legal vote was taken and all parties were treated fairly. We applaud the SGA for their handling of this situation.

And we condemn Senator Mauldin for two things. Not only was his neglect of his duties an insult to the Junior Class who elected him, but the highly personal letter he sent to the SGA criticizing SGA President Darrell Wells was insulting and immature. His extensive use of name-calling was utterly inappropriate — actions not worthy of someone holding a senatorial position.

SGA has done a lot of growing up in the past year. Senator Mauldin, you need to take some lessons.

ELLEN GOODMAN

As a child of the 1950s, I was taught to think of the squirrel as a lovable, furry role model of the American work ethic. The creature who frequented my school books worked his tail off all fall collecting the acorns of assorted oak trees. When winter came around he survived by just nipping over to little tree grocery store for his three square nuts a day.

I should have known better. I am sure. The only tree in our apartment courtyard was an ailanthus not an oak. The squirrels in our neighborhood seemed to spend most of their time perfecting their electric tightwire act.

But these were the Cold War years when all good little animals were expected to do their part for the great anthropomorphic propaganda machine. Remember the three little piggies? The boring, brick-house piggy was the one who survived the big bad wolf. You get the idea.

Since then I have learned the truth about urban squirrels, and of course about the economy. Squirrels may indeed put away their acorns for a snowy day. But they don't have a clue where they put them.

Their survival, indeed their complete takeover of the city, has nothing to do with the virtues of the good old 1950s: industry, husbandry, loyalty. They thrive on the economic tools of the 1980s: ingenuity, adaptability, flat-out nerve. And, of course, sunflower seeds.

Which brings us to the subject at hand. The case of the Wallenda at my window. Named after the humanoids, the Flying Wallendas.

For the better part of three years, I have been happily feeding an assortment of basic winter-hardy New England birds out of a modest plastic bird feeder at my second-story kitchen window. My Audubon life-list includes the squabbling finch family, several pairs of titmice, some overbearing blue jays, subdued junkos, sparrows, and an occasional downy woodpecker, or, in this case, downy plasticpecker.

The first hint that a somewhat heavier visitor had taken up a post at the window was the discovery that the seed cups were being knocked to the ground. The second hint was Wally himself performing a flying leap from fence to electric wire to tree branch to window feeder. Degree of difficulty 7, execution 8.7.

This feat was matched by an extremely large mammal, female and human, lunging at the window, knocking in anger, and yelling at a squirrel not remotely my own size. Degree of difficulty 1, execution 3.5, factor of absurdity 9.8.

For several weeks, Wally and I performed our duet. He worked on his acrobatics with the passion of an apprentice in a circus training program. I worked on my bird feeder defense hysterics. The difference, however, was that he improved his act.

Sometime during February he learned to execute a soft landing in the feeder with one graceful motion. It would have taken him less time to learn, I am sure, except that the feeder was squirrel proof. Did I mention that?

Never mind the 1950s squirrel, that dutiful hunter-gathere. By my observation there is nothing as impressive and determined as a '90s squirrel conquering the latest technology. After one month, he could not only get at the seeds, he could balance directly on top of the food under a small — equally squirrel-proof — overhang, thereby gaining food and shelter simultaneously. Degree of difficulty 10, execution 10.3.

A '90s kind of squirrel, he didn't just work hard, he worked smart. Indeed, he began exhibiting pride in his accomplishment and boldness at his feat. I, on the other hand, have been reduced to his co-dependent or his audience. If the feeder is empty, he stares directly through the window at me until I put down my newspaper and get him some more seeds.

Does this mean that I can't defend my own home bird feeder against a measly squirrel? The problem is that I belong to the old economy. I have to go to an office to write the words that get the paycheck that puts bird food in the feeder. I have to squirrel away savings — just like I was taught — while he spends all day learning new skills. He wins.

Let it not be said however that I am hopelessly mired in oldthink. I'm a '90s kind of gal. After all, I used to run a bird feeder. Now after extensive retraining, I can proudly announce that I am operating a squirrel feeder.

Food for thought

Editor, Rotunda :

In 1793 Napoleon Bonaparte left Corsica for military academy in France. His "education" was completed at Longwood Estate on St. Helena Island in 1821. His diploma read "Certificate of Death."

In the few years between he changed the map of Europe and beyond. He and his serfs of France with a glorious vision of an empire built on rape, murder and plunder. What nation has not trod this bloody path?

"He that kills one or two is a murderer, but killing millions can make one a hero for the ages."

After Waterloo (and a few other lessons in humility) Napoleon was deported to the south Atlantic island of St. Helena, together with his guards and a physician skilled in the art of slow death by arsenic.

How many Longwood and other students know enough not to swallow everything handed them by professors, peers, medical doctors or even clergy? But we can learn to trust our own God-given intellect and instincts, when they are dedicated to the service of God and others.

We visited his great mausoleum in Paris, where he too awaits the Day of Reckoning. Galatians 6:7 "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." And on that day I will remember John 3:16, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

A DISPATCH FROM SPY MAGAZINE

Meet the Nobelist

This Month's Question: If You Were Trapped on Gilligan's Island, How Would You Escape?

David H. Hubel, 1981 Nobel Prize in Medicine: "You could send up smoke signals, or if you had any electronic equipment, you could try to assemble something that would transmit....I suppose [you could] try to get off on some sort of raft. It would depend on how far the land is....Are you in the middle of the ocean, with hundreds of miles between you and any shore? I'd certainly think it over before I started swimming."

Val Fitch, 1980 Nobel Prize in Physics: "[My escape] depends on the circumstances on which I was trapped. You mean, just isolated on an island somewhere...so the options are to build a boat and to go where you want to go? Of course, one can always use the stars to navigate, so that's not a problem....[Building a boat] depends on the materials available....What are you giving me? If you're giving me just sand, then there's a problem, because I wouldn't have anything concrete to make a concrete canoe. If one has trees, then you make dugout canoes, just like the Polynesians. [But] now you have to make a fire. One might be able to start a fire, and then you can burn out a log. One time in my life I started a fire by twirling some twigs....I'm a survival type."

Donald J Cram, 1987 Nobel Prize in Chemistry: "I'd look around to see what materials would be available to start fires....One would be with flint, if you had anything that would generate a spark...and the other is simply to use friction, as you do by taking a piece of wood and hollowing it out and then taking another piece of wood that is slender...and coiling it around some string and then pulling on it and rotating one with the other. This is the way I did it when I was a Boy Scout. That was part of a merit badge I got. I'm 72, and I ride a surfboard. By virtue of surfing, I've been around the ocean a lot. I feel comfortable with the interface between land and ocean....I have some feeling for currents. You can tell a little bit, now and then, about how distant a landmass is from backwash waves....Some of the ancient people that navigated were able to use that sometimes in navigation.

McGee enriches musical scene

By Janet Batta
Rotunda Staff

Every Tuesday night for almost a year Pat McGee manages to lure many students to Perini's to hear him play. With very little professional instruction or lessons, Pat has become one of the biggest hits on campus because of his tremendous talents with his guitar and vocals.

With the influence of his older brother and not to mention the Allman Brothers, Pat started his guitar playing when he was sixteen. He eventually got together and played some electric guitar with a band in high school.

After hearing Pat play many nights, one would be amazed to find out that he can not read music, and every song he plays he holds the music in his memory.

Chris Bashista has been playing congas with Pat since the high school band and eventually they started in a band called Gillian's Fundeck, which is still playing today.

After playing at colleges such as Princeton, James Madison, Virginia Tech, and Elon, Pat and Chris pivoted their musical career at Longwood.

Now Chris and Pat have connected with two other players, Hunter Merritt and Todd Hipps to form their new band, Rhyme and Reason. The new band has started at Perini's and once again the place was packed.

Rhyme and Reason basically plays the same type of music that Pat and Chris played which was a mixture of Grateful Dead, Blues Traveler, Spin Doctors, and of course, the Allman Brothers. Hunter Merritt, the second lead guitarist of the band, has contributed a few songs of his own that the band has been playing, and the band plans on working on some more originals and maybe someday CD.

The band has been practicing approximately twenty hours a week with sessions usually starting at twelve-thirty at night. When Pat was asked about his future plans with the band he said, "We're ready to do whatever it takes." The band is definitely in it for the long haul and their dedication to the music proves it.

Virginia Grill offers a touch of class

By Karen Crosby

Walk into Tony's Upstair's Lounge after 9 pm and you will find college students and locals drinking, dancing, and shooting pool, but before 9 pm is a whole different drinking story.

Instead of walking up the stairs and seeing bouncers in the foyer with ink pads in hand, a table with flowers is there to greet you. Candlelit tables, tablecloths, and potted plants are just a few of the changes made at Tony's to promote the restaurant atmosphere of the Virginia Street Grill.

The Virginia Street Grill is one of the best kept secrets in Farmville. Recently opened, a companion and I could not find any faults.

After being immediately seated at the table, we were served homemade sourdough bread with butter.

We started the meal off with the grilled jumbo shrimp with a buerre-blanc sauce and white mushroom caps stuffed with country ham, cheddar, and Monterey Jack cheese.

The shrimp was fresh, plump, and juicy, and covered in a light buttery sauce, while the mushroom caps were so delicious I came home with fork marks in my hand.

For the main course I chose the lump crabcakes and my companion had the filet mignon.

The crabcakes were sautéed golden brown and served with black beans, rice, and a vegetable.

The most unique and tantalizing aspect of the crabcakes was the fresh peach salsa served on top. The peaches provided a delicious contrast to the crab.

The filet mignon was cooked to perfection and served with a red wine, mushroom, and a watercress topping, along with roasted potatoes and a vegetable. It melted in the mouth and I was lucky enough to capture a bite and steal a few mushrooms. But definitely a meal one doesn't want to share.

The more we ate, the sooner the night at Tony's receded into our minds and were replaced with dreams of dinners to come at Virginia Street Grill.

To top off the meal we felt it necessary to order desert.

Since summer is on its way I decided to the chocolate swirl cheesecake with raspberry topping, while my companion had the pecan pie with homemade whipped cream. All deserts are homemade, including the pie crusts.

Virginia Street Grill serves lunch from 11:30 to 3:00 and dinner from 5:00 to 9:00. They also have a carry-out service.

The Virginia Street Grill is mom's homemade cooking after she attended culinary school.

As if food is not incentive enough, there is also a 10% discount for all college students. This does not, unfortunately, include alcoholic beverages.

Provoking the muse

In a blatant example of favoritism, here's a photo of Peter Himmelman.

By Erin McCay
Editor In Chief

Well, I have to admit that I was a little daunted when I found out that I was going to have the opportunity to interview Peter Himmelman.

Peter, along with Brenda Kahn and Darden Smith, are currently involved in traveling from school to school (unfortunately for them, it sounds like most of their destinations are about par with Farmville) in an effort to promote themselves, as well as the Sony MiniDisc in the "All Strung Out" tour. At least I think that's what Sony's new toy is called. They had some sort of altar set up in the back of the Commonwealth Ballroom celebrating this fantastic innovation in music technology, but I'll get to that later. Silly me, I was too busy to pay attention to anything but the music.

Anyway, the reason I was so trepidatious about meeting Peter (hey, I spent an hour with the artists, and I'll never see them again, so I'll go ahead and pretend like we are bosom friends) is that I have admired him tremendously for quite a while, and I had managed to work myself up into quite a state of nervous anticipation.

Being the dedicated budding journalist, I prepared all my questions in advance to ask Peter, Brenda, and Darden. You know the ones — "Who are your favorite artists?"; "What are your plans for the future?"; and that perennial favorite (no pun intended) "If you were a vegetable, what would you be?"

I will take this opportunity, however, to apologize to all three for even considering boring them with all the usual bullshit that they are greeted with at every other college campus.

As you might have guessed, after spending about 30 seconds with them, I realized the error of my ways, and all my oh-so-original questions were junked without a second's regret. Though Peter offered some alternative questions ("If you were an entree at the Golden Corral, would you include a baked potato, french fries, or rice?"), I decided to spend some time with them and get to know them a little better.

The first of the three I had met was Brenda Kahn. I didn't recognize her at first, because her knees were covered (for those of you who don't know what I'm talking about, grab a look at her Epiphany in Brooklyn album).

Anyway, she dispelled any lingering ideas I might have had about the semi-divine nature of actual, commercially recognized (if, at least in respect to this tour, unpaid) musicians when she asked where the nearest bathroom was. Ah, the dreams of youth shattered.

Soon after, Peter and Darden came in, accompanied by their entourage of toadies (the sound guy, the light guy, the manager, and the guy who hands them water and guitars on stage). Upon arrival at Lankford, Peter took control and, gathering up Darden, some of the crew, me, and some other students, he led us on a tour of the building.

He boldly entered a room where a swarm of jiggling, lycra-clad beauties were deeply involved in some cardiovascular activities and proceeded to give a running commentary on the sweat-sheened girls' performance, at least until the head exerciser kicked him out. We then trooped, en masse, to a small office to get the interview underway.

As I stated before, rather than hampering the whole "All Strung Out" experience with pedestrian questions, I basically just sat there as the three of them performed.

I was solemnly informed that Darden and Peter had just bought Brenda a pillow as a gift. I was solemnly informed that their purpose was to help Japan take over America. And I was solemnly informed that, despite their expectations, Farmville was one of the cooler places they had been thus far. Cool.

Darden had to leave fairly quickly to haggle over what I believe is the design of his new release's cover, but Brenda and Peter hung around for a while longer, mugging and joking, and basically showing that they are two of the most remarkable people to hit Farmville in the recent past.

They regaled me with their words of wisdom. "I'm married, I take aspirin, and I sing," intoned Peter. Thus, he partakes in the holy trinity of performance: sex, drugs, and rock and roll.

And Brenda, when reminded that she once said that if her record company had paid her more they would have gotten more than her knees on hew album cover, looked somewhat chagrined and said "Did I say that? Well," she admitted, "it does sound like me. And anyway, it's fucking true," she added defiantly.

The closeness between all three was obvious. There were many blatantly private jokes that I, as an outsider, had no grasp of, though they did make every effort to include me.

And the rapport followed them onstage. During the sound check, I was privileged to hear Peter pay homage to Brenda in husky tones, and, amazingly, create lyrics incorporating jokes from our earlier interview, some teasing comments on Farmville itself, and even a comment on the green shoes worn by one person observing the sound check.

His capacity for spontaneous lyric creation was truly outstanding (I swear I'm not being sarcastic), and for all those who weren't fortunate enough to hear him warming up but managed to make it to the show itself, they got a taste of this talent in his ode to Farmville, or as he called it occasionally, Farmdale (in what I assume was a tongue-in-cheek manner). He also, bless his heart, played a bit of "Free Bird."

In her performance, Brenda made it obvious that she doesn't take any crap off of anybody. She was the first to take the stage, and after a rendition of "Speedy Motorcycle," a touching, heart-warming duet with Peter, she proceeded into her next song. Unfortunately for those of us who were getting into her performance, there was a throng of jerks clustered around the MiniDisc display who were annoyingly, and loudly, chattering away.

Ignoring the hostile glances from several audience members, including myself, they blithely continued babbling until Brenda finished her first song and said "What are you people doing back there? Don't you have any fucking respect? A singer is up here doing her best and you guys are more interested in what fucking Michael Bolton has to say!"

And, apparently enraged by the mere sight of the dully glowing MiniDisc display (which, folks, can, yes it can, be recorded on. Zoinks!), she demanded "Get that fucking thing out of here! I hate that fucking thing!"

After a few moments, the object of her loathing was hastily dragged out, and with a "Is that fucking thing gone yet? Good!" she asked one of the guys who had been annoying the whole crowd (Don't you hate people who talk during shows?) to join her on stage, which he did.

"What's your name? Scott? Well, Scott, this song's for you," she said.

And when another group of people were whispering in the audience, she threatened to sing "Grout...grout...grout..." sotto voce, over and over again until they told "the whole class" (Brenda's words) what they were talking about.

They demurred until the monotone repetitions of what may be one of the most unattractive words in the English language finally got to them, and they admitted that they were commenting on what a talented performer she was. Personally, I was very glad to hear her later play a particular favorite of mine, "Madagascar."

Next on was Darden Smith, who, in contrast to the antics of Brenda and Peter, quietly entered the stage area, sat down to his piano and began to play. After his first song, he concentrated on playing guitar, chatting with the audience and leaving the stage to sing without the benefit of electronic amplification. Most notable was the title song of his new album, "Little Victories." I especially liked the pause. Hey, I could do that!

Finally, Peter performed. He was the most interactive of all three performers, inviting students on stage to do interpretive dances and actually offering money to one man who had some of his CD's. Peter created a few potentially money-making jingles for a kosher spring water commercial, and his paean to "Dixie the Weiner Dog," uh, I mean "Noble Dachshund," was inspiring. I actually felt one foot tall with a nubby tail.

All in all, the "All Strung Out" tour was worth the money. Well, it would have been worth the money if we had to pay for it. I know they should have been paid for it. (Beware. Here comes the pithy, cliched final paragraphs that will make the Sony Corporation happy.)

It was a fantastic show. The range of music was wide, but each artist had his or her own appeal. And though trite, this is true - all three of their releases - Epiphany in Brooklyn by Brenda, Peter's Flown This Acid World, and Darden's Little Victories are all worth buying, as is Peter's earlier release, From Strength to Strength (my personal favorite). I haven't heard Brenda's earlier release, but I understand that it is better than Epiphany. And, on a personal note, I was pleased to discover that my favorite artist isn't an asshole.

On the contrary, Peter, like Brenda and Darden, is among the funniest, most interesting, and likeable people I have ever met. I only hope that wasn't because I was the "press." But somehow I doubt that any of them is that fake. Isn't it nice when life works out that way?

HONOLULU (AP) The International Pog Tournament is offering a $500 reward for the return of about 9,000 stolen pogs, according to a spokesman.

John Silvia said the milk caps were stolen Saturday from an Airborne Express office in Mapunapuna.

They were part of a shipment of 20,000 for the tournament, which began Monday and runs through Thursday, he said.

The pogs have "Outrigger Hotels '93" printed on the outside rim, with a Sea Life Park sponsor seal in the center, Silvia said.

LEGAZPI, Philippines (AP) The Mayon volcano exploded for the third day Tuesday, dumping tons of cement-like ash on villages near its slopes and raising fears of avalanches as rain clouds gathered around the volcano.

The Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology said Tuesday's explosions were marked by ash emissions up to one mile high, adding that larger explosions were still possible.

Mayon began erupting Sunday, hurling ash more than two miles from its crater and driving thousands of villagers into evacuation centers. There were no reports of casualties directly resulting from the eruptions.

Schools in Legazpi cancelled classes and Philippine Airlines suspended its flights to the city, 10 miles north of the volcano.

Eleven explosions were recorded during a 15-hour observation period that ended Tuesday. The volcano also registered 124 quakes during that period.

Scientists warned of avalanches that may be triggered by rain.

Mayon is one of the country's 21 most active volcanos, including Mount Pinatubo, which BEIJING (AP) A weekend earthquake severely damaged a rural town in Tibet and killed at least one resident, the official Xinhua News Agency reported Tuesday.

The earthquake shook the remote region late Saturday with a force of 6.6 on the Richter scale, signifying a tremor capable of causing severe damage.

Xinhua said houses collapsed in the town of Ngamring, where the death occurred. It had no other details.

RESTON, Va. (AP) USAir will spend about $200 million to buy Rolls-Royce jet engines to power 15 Boeing 757-200 twinjet airliners, the companies said.

The Arlington, Va.-based airline now has 40 757s in service or on order. The airline also placed options to buy engines for 15 other jets.

"Eighty percent of Boeing 757 operators have selected the Rolls-Royce engine, and there is clearly a high degree of customer satisfaction," Rolls-Royce Chairman Sir Ralph Robins said Thursday.

The planes are scheduled for delivery in 1995 and 1996.

Yeltsin seizes power

MOSCOW (AP) Boris Yeltsin's imposition of emergency rule gained wide support among workers Monday but was opposed by many of the governments of Russia's autonomous republics.

The 16 republics in Russia, which together make up roughly a quarter of the country's territory, have their own legislatures and are nominally autonomous. Many seek independence from Russia and apparently fear that strong presidential rule would block their efforts.

The government of the northern Sakha republic, formerly Yakutia, issued a statement saying the Russian power struggle has become extremely destructive. It demanded a political compromise.

The Komi republic chided both Yeltsin and his foes for engaging in political fights instead of working on measures to improve a declining economy.

Karelia denounced Yeltsin's action as violating the constitution.

Dagestan and Kabardino-Balkaria took a slightly milder stance, urging strict compliance with the constitution.

Statements of support poured in from the cities of Chita, Yaroslavl and Yekaterinburg, Yeltsin's hometown. In Moscow, Mayor Yuri Luzhkov defended Yeltsin's actions.

"The deputies have put the president in an unbearable position, making him unable to ensure the normal functioning of the executive branch," Luzhkov told the Interfax news agency.

Key expressions of support came from Russia's powerful coal miners.

In the northern coal-producing city of Vorkuta, the City Workers Committee adopted an appeal to the citizens of Russia, saying "Yes to the president and the reforms, no to the Supreme Soviet and Congress," Interfax reported. It quoted committee member Georgi Kudrov as saying the miners would resort to an indefinite strike if Congress tries to impeach Yeltsin.

The chairman of the Independent Trade Union of Miners of Russia, Alexander Sergeyev, told Interfax the union unequivocally supported Yeltsin. In the coal-rich Kuzbass, workers threatened to strike, presenting what appeared to be a mixture of political and economic demands.

In 1989 and the beginning of the 1990s, coal miners' strikes nearly brought Russia's industries to a halt. Economic demands quickly turned political and reformist, shifting the balance of power in the country toward Yeltsin and undermining the authority of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

Meanwhile, no rallies were reported in Russia apart from Moscow, where about 200 Congress supporters and about 1,000 pro-Yeltsin demonstrators staged separate gatherings near the White House parliament building.

Man executed

JARRATT, Va. (AP) A man who shot and killed five women during an 11-day crime spree and got caught when he tried to sell candy bars he had taken from one of his victims was executed in the electric chair.

Syvasky Poyner, 36, went to his death late Thursday at Greensville Correctional Center after the U.S. Supreme Court, in a 7-2 vote, rejected an appeal in which he argued the electric chair is cruel and unusual punishment.

In a final statement read by a chaplain, he said: "Every hurt that has ever been done ... heal that hurt. I choose to forgive, and I ask to be forgiven."

Poyner was convicted of killing five women during a 1984 crime spree in Hampton, Newport News and Williamsburg. Poyner robbed his victims and told police he shot them because he didn't want to leave witnesses. He said he chose women because they were easily frightened.

The victims were a hair salon manager; the manager and housekeeper of a motel; a nursing student working at an ice cream store; and a candy distributor.

Police arrested Poyner two days after the murder of the candy distributor when witnesses identified him trying to sell candy bars taken from her.

He was the 19th inmate executed in Virginia and the 195th nationwide since the Supreme Court allowed states to resume capital punishment in 1976.

Student credit cards questioned

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) Student-owned credit cards are a good idea because they can lead to a good credit history if used properly, consumer credit companies say.

But consumer advocates argue that the cards can lead to indiscriminate spending, irresponsible budgeting, and, if mishandled, a trail of debt.

"There is no disadvantage for anyone in having a credit card. There's only a disadvantage in misusing a credit card," said Lynne Strang, spokeswoman for American Financial Services Association, a trade association that represents nonbanking sources of consumer credit, such as American Express, department stores and finance companies.

"We're pretty much living in a credit society where you need credit cards to process a lot of everyday transactions," Strang said.

But Paul Richard of the National Center for Financial Education in San Diego said the marketing of credit cards unfairly lures students into spending money they don't have.

"I was bankrupt at age 25," said Richard, adding he got credit cards as a college student. "That was 22 years ago, and I've not used credit since. I learned the hard way."

Some companies have special campaigns to attract students, most of whom are courted at some point in college with information on how to become a card holder. Interest rates on cards generally range from 12 percent to 22 percent.

Chris Spencer, spokesman for NationsBank-Columbia, said the bank's top concern is establishing long-term relationships early.

"We tend to focus on developing the loyalty and establishing ourselves as their bank," he said.

Spencer, like other consumer creditors, said he could not release the number of credit cards issued to students.

Richard estimates there are thousands of students with credit cards they can't afford.

"Our organization is opposed to giving credit cards to young students or anybody who can't get one on their own," Richard said. "It does the students more long-term harm than it does good."

The real issue, he said, is not whether students pay the bills, but what's sacrificed. Many cut back on classes to work and pay the bills, he said.

"What students are doing when they're taking on this debt is spending money they don't have," Richard said.

And the college-related debt doesn't disappear upon graduation, he said. Unpaid balances follow students, marring credit records for years.

Students say they can understand both sides of the debate.

"I think all students should definitely have credit cards for emergencies," said Molly Watson, a 20-year-old junior at the University of South Carolina. "I'm not very good with my money all the time, so I kind of wish I'd never had any."

USC sophomore Brian Gambrell said he's learning just how dangerous credit cards can be.

"Plastic money is a lot of fun. It's neat knowing you have $300 more to spend if you have to," Gambrell said.

Yeltsin summit "on track"

WASHINGTON (AP) The White House said Monday that plans for a summit with President Boris Yeltsin remained on track, though an air of uncertainty clouded the upcoming Vancouver meeting.

In public, everyone from President Clinton down insisted that the United States and Russia were forging ahead toward the April 3-4 summit in Vancouver, Canada, with no plans to switch the site to Moscow or anywhere else.

In private, however, U.S. officials said the start of impeachment proceedings by parliament against Yeltsin could make the Russian leader reluctant to leave his country. For now, said State Department officials, the situation was too fluid to predict for sure that the summit would take place.

U.S. diplomats reporting from Moscow indicated that Yeltsin was losing the support of some in his cabinet and could not rely on the constitutional court to side with him in his dispute with parliament.

The final decision on whether and where to hold the summit was Yeltsin's to make, one U.S. official said.

Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev, who headed for Washington Monday for meetings later this week with Clinton and Secretary of State Warren Christopher, told reporters over the weekend that the summit was on track.

The White House agreed, saying it had not received any request from Yeltsin to move the meeting to Moscow or to change it in any way.

Clinton, asked in Little Rock, Ark., if he would consider moving the summit, said: "No plans to change the site at this time."

His spokeswoman, Dee Dee Myers, in response to a similar question from reporters in Washington, said the White House would consider moving the summit to Moscow if Yeltsin asked.

But her boss, White House communications director George Stephanopoulos, was quick to follow up with a statement that "we've had no indications of any kind that there's a need to move the summit. We plan to go to Vancouver on April 3 and 4."

State Department officials suggested a Moscow summit would be unlikely because a Clinton visit to the Russian capital would be regarded by Yeltsin's numerous political foes as interference in internal politics.

One U.S. analyst said a Clinton trip to Moscow could alienate the very politicians who might succeed Yeltsin if he loses his struggle with parliament, and with whom the United States might have to work in the future.

In that regard, the administration on Monday appeared to hedge its bets.

"Right now," said Stephanopoulos, Yeltsin leads Russia's reform process. "That is not to say that there are not other reformers in Russia as well, but he is the leader of the reform process, he personifies the reform process."

The chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee seconded that approach.

"We want to lend our support to Yeltsin and do what we can to be helpful," said Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind. But "the ultimate objective for the United States ... is not that one leader ... prevail, but rather that the movement toward reform prevail."

For now, the Clinton administration has decided its best course is to proceed with summit plans in Vancouver as a signal to Yeltsin's opponents that the United States is firmly behind his beleaguered reform program.

Underscoring that point, Christopher warned that if Russia "falls into anarchy or lurches back into despotism, the price that we pay could be frightening.

"Nothing less is involved than the possibility of a revived nuclear threat, higher U.S. defense budgets, spreading instability and a devastating setback for the world democratic movement. This deserves the attention of each and every American," he said in a speech in Chicago.

Ritalin helps children with attention disorders

WILMINGTON (AP) Parents and teachers say the use of a controversial drug to medicate children with attention deficit disorders is becoming very popular, partially because of educators' enthusiasm for it.

Angela Davis knows firsthand of the popularity of Ritalin, or its generic equivalent, methylphenidate. She received numerous complaints from teachers about the short attention spans of her children, Matthew, 9, and Hannah, 8.

A pediatrician prescribed the drug after he and a child psychologist diagnosed the children with the disorder, a label for a collection of neurological behaviors that keeps children from learning.

Matthew and Hannah's behavior improved drastically, but not to the teachers' satisfaction.

"Some of the teachers, they've asked me to get the doctors to increase the dose," Ms. Davis told The Morning Star of Wilmington. "The doctors are very firm. 'Tell the teachers this is not a tranquilizer.' I've had to relay the messages back and forth. That was really a weird feeling, the teachers wanting them to take more."

Though there is little data available, parents and educators say Ritalin's use is increasing. In December, when a Morning Star reporter volunteered at Myrtle Grove Middle School, she doled out medicine for much of her four-hour shift. A drawer of her desk held 30 or 40 doses of prescribed medication, much of it Ritalin.

"It's very controversial, the issue of medicating children based on behavior," said Phyllis Bayzle, a counselor at Gregory Elementary.

Her first experience with Ritalin was about six years ago when a child in her fourth-grade class was failing. Knowing his parents had separated and thinking he was depressed, she suggested he go to Southeastern Mental Health Center for counseling.

"A couple of weeks later, the child started working," she said. His grades improved, and Ms. Bayzle learned the child was diagnosed with attention deficit disorder and was taking Ritalin.

"You have to stop the impulse not to want to do it for all kids with these problems," she said. "We in education have to be very careful not to jump on the bandwagon."

The schools are one-third of the equation, said Harriet Lennon, principal of Alderman Elementary School. Educators and parents must work with health professionals both pediatricians and psychologists for the best treatment of the child.

Ritalin can be prescribed only by a doctor, but teachers can recognize symptoms of attention deficit disorder, which can range from the intense daydreaming Hannah suffered to the hyperactivity Matthew displayed.

Experts agree that Ritalin should be used almost as a last resort.

Often children who need Ritalin have problems that require counseling or tutoring, said pediatrician Angelina Knox.

"I don't just use it by itself," she said.

Ritalin was introduced in 1955 for treatment of drug-induced lethargy, mild depression and narcolepsy. Now, its most widespread use is among children diagnosed with attention deficit disorder.

The drug stimulates the brain and in adults has the same effect as speed, or amphetamine compounds. But in children, it has the opposite effect. Why the drug works one way in adults and another in children is a mystery.

Mothers of children as young as 18 months have asked Knox for the drug.

"They say, 'Please give him Ritalin. He's so overactive. ...' I tell them, 'This is a phase of their development,'" she said.

Fliers missing

VIRGINIA BEACH (AP) The search area for two missing Navy fliers whose F-14 Tomcat crashed into the Atlantic Ocean off the North Carolina coast was expanded, authorities said.

Navy and Coast Guard searchers in two vessels and six aircraft spent a third day Wednesday looking for Lt. William E. Daisley, 27, of Port Allegany, Pa., and Lt. Cmdr. Fred D. Dillingham, 43, of Virginia Beach.

Their Ocean Naval Air Station jet went down Monday during a two-hour training mission that started about 10:15 a.m. Wreckage from the plane was found that afternoon shortly after 4 p.m. about 20 miles east of Nags Head.

There was no communication from the fliers before the crash indicating they were having problems, said Cmdr. Stephen Honda, a spokesman for the Navy's Atlantic Fleet air force.

Honda said the search area Wednesday ranged from 15 miles off the coast to 120 miles at sea, from Cape Charles, Va., to Oregon Inlet, N.C.

Virginia news

NORFOLK (AP) Navy investigators blamed a hydraulic fire in the cockpit of a Navy E-2C Hawkeye radar plane for a July crash that killed the five crewman on board.

In a report released Wednesday, investigators said they found no crew error or maintenance problem. The cause of the fire was unknown.

If the cockpit had not filled with smoke as the Norfolk-based plane approached the stern of the carrier USS John F. Kennedy for an emergency landing, the plane might have been recoverable, the report said.

The accident occurred July 31 about 75 miles north of Puerto Rico, where the Kennedy was training for its current Mediterranean Sea deployment.

The investigation, convened by Rear Adm. J.M. Lair, examined each piece of about 1,500 pounds of debris that was recovered, studied past repairs on the plane and its log books, and looked at the experience of the crew.

The investigators found that the front cockpit cabin door would not latch. That door is inside the plane and leads to the rear of the aircraft where three other crew members work.

The investigators recommended that safety instructions be changed to clarify that the co-pilot's hatch should be opened only when fire is out. It is believed that the cockpit fire escalated when the pilots opened the hatches to vent the smoke.

Lacrosse wins opener 10-6

By Kimberly Chapman

With the first two games of the spring postponed due to inclement weather, Longwood's lacrosse team finally took the field Sunday against visiting Earlham (Ind.) College. The previously missed games didn't seem to hurt the Lady Lancers as they defeated their guests 10-6 at Farmville's First Avenue Field.

"I am very pleased with the results of the game," commented coach Sandy Bridgeman. "Earlham is a good team and we played well considering this was our first game of the season."

After the first 30 minutes of play, the Lady Lancers were deadlocked 4-4 with their foes. The second half proved quite different for Longwood, as they held the visitors to only two goals, while scoring six of their own.

Leading the scoring for Longwood was freshman Natalie Buritsch with three goals. Seniors Trish McCormick and Tonia Harris along with junior Anita Warford each added two goals, while senior Susie Lindsay scored one.

"The difference for us was that we denied the ball from getting down the field," said Bridgeman of the second half. "Earlham had to work so hard to get the ball on attack that they got winded; we basically wore them down and then utilized our conditioning for the turn-around."

Bridgeman felt another key in the game was the Lady Lancer defense. "For the first time playing together, our defense really jelled to shut down Earlham's attack," said the coach. "Additionally, senior co-captains Denise Hanley and Susie Lindsay combined on defense to stop Earlham's best and most threatening player."

The Lady Lancers are now 1-0 with their next game scheduled for Saturday against Virginia Tech's club team. Game time is 1:00 at First Avenue Field.

Lady Golfers tie for third at W&M

In its second tournament of the year, the Longwood women's golf team shot 339-336-675 to finish in a tie with James Madison for third place out of 11 teams at the 36-hole Ford's Colony/William & Mary Invitational Saturday and Sunday in Williamsburg.

Methodist College won the tourney with a 322-332-654 while Penn State (337-330-667) was second. JMU's Calay Jaynes shot 81-76-157 to win the individual title. Longwood's Charlaine Coetzee shot 85-80-165 to tie for ninth place in the individual standings.

Also scoring for Longwood were Brenda Campbell-Harris who shot 83-84-167 to tie for 13th, Anna Radford who shot 85-84-169 for 15th, freshman Janine Ballow 86-88-174 for 22nd and Michelle Ziats 97-101-198 to tie for 50th place.

"I was disappointed in how we played," said Longwood coach Cindy Ho. "We're not executing our shots around the greens. In the fall we were making the key putts and chips, but this spring we've made poor decisions. I would have no problem with us finishing third at William & Mary if we had played up to our potential."

Playing as individuals for Longwood, Anna Holm shot 101-102-203 and Danielle Karish 99-93-192 for 43rd place.

According to Ho, Holm is working on a new swing. She won't be back in the lineup for several weeks.

"Anna will help us again, but she's got to adjust to a change in her swing," said the coach.

Next up for Longwood is the UNC Wilmington Invitational April 9-11 in Wilmington, N.C. Coach Ho is hoping the team will get more practice time on the course rather than indoors over the next two weeks.

Lancer Netters bow to NNA

Longwood's men's tennis team came up on the short end of a 6-3 decision in its season opening match last Thursday at Newport News as the Apprentice School beat the visiting Lancers. The Builders won four singles and two doubles bouts to take the victory.

Grabbing wins for Longwood in singles were sophomore Dave Childs at No. 2, and Rich Adams at No. 4. Childs and Adams also teamed up to get Longwood a win at No. 2 doubles.

The Lancers are scheduled to play at St. Paul's Wednesday at 1:30 and at Ferrum Thursday at 3:00

Kyle Weaver

Senior named player of the week

Weaver stops raiders on five hits

Longwood senior baseball player Kyle Weaver, who pitched the Lancers to a 3-2 win over Shippensburg Sunday, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period March 14-21. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

Weaver was outstanding while going the distance Sunday as the Lancers rallied to beat Shippensburg in a rematch from last spring's North Atlantic Region Tournament. Allowing just five hits, Weaver fanned seven and walked one. Only in the third inning when the Raiders bunched three hits to score twice did he falter. Shipppensburg failed to get a hit over the final three innings.

"Kyle really did the job for us Sunday," said Lancer coach Buddy Bolding. "He pitched very well against a good ball club. His play this spring has been outstanding since day one."

Weaver, a tri-captain for the second year, is the leader of the Lancer pitching staff. Going 35 innings, he has a 4-1 record, an earned run average of 1.80 and four complete games. In addition, he has struck out 30 batters while walking just seven.

Now 22-6 for his career, Weaver is fourth in career victories (22) and winning percentage (.786). A graduate of Halifax County High School, Weaver is a finance major.

Baseball now 8-4-1

Lancers split with Shippensburg

Thanks to seniors Kyle Weaver, Todd Bowman and Shawn Jones Longwood gained a split of a home twinbill with Shippensburg Sunday. The Lancers, who will take an 8-4-1 record into a 10-game homestand this week, beat the Raiders 3-2 in the opener but lost the second game 6-3.

Weaver was outstanding on the mound while going the distance Sunday as the Lancers rallied to beat Shippensburg in a rematch from last spring's North Atlantic Region Tournament. Allowing just five hits, Weaver fanned seven and walked one. Only in the third inning when the Raiders bunched three hits to score twice did he falter. Shipppensburg failed to get a hit over the final three innings.

Bowman and Jones provided timely hitting for the Lancers in the bottom of the sixth. With two outs and Brian Bassett on second base, Bowman hit a drive to center which landed at the base of the fence near the 400-foot sign. Jones followed with a towering blast which easily cleared the fence in right-center and gave Longwood a 3-2 lead. Weaver made the lead stand by retiring Shippensburg in the top of the seventh.

Shippensburg ace Jude Schroyer limited the Lancers to six hits in the nightcap as the Raiders, now 7-11, took a 6-3 victory. Sophomore Tut Bailey had a double, a homer and three hits total to lead the visitors. Lancer senior pitcher Wyatt Flippen took the loss. He is now 1-3.

Jones had five hits in the two games to lead Longwood with three in the opener and two more in the second game. Chris Tyson belted a triple and added a sacrifice fly for Longwood.

After being snowed out of five games last week (including the Shippensburg Invitational), the Longwood will have its hands full this week barring more bad weather. The Lancers are scheduled to play 11 games over the next seven days and 10 of those contests are slated for Lancer Field. Division III Roger Williams visits for twinbills Tuesday and Wednesday. Thursday Longwood plays at Norfolk State for a single game at 3:00. Friday and Sunday LC hosts Virginia State and Oneonta State for twinbills at 1:00 with a single home game Saturday against Shepherd at 2:00. Next Monday Division I Liberty will visit for a single game starting at 3:00.

Leading the Longwood hitters are third baseman Terry Taylor, center fielder Shawn Jones and sophomore shortstop Jeff Toms. Jones is hitting .400 with 10 RBI, 3 homers and two doubles, while Taylor is hitting .400 with six doubles, a triple, a homer and 19 RBI. Taylor's 11-game hitting streak came to an end Sunday in a second game loss to Shippensburg.

Toms, the team's lead-off batter, is tops with a .415 average. He also leads the club in runs (12), walks (12) and stolen bases (5-5). Also hitting well are sophomore Brian Bassett , .341, 11 runs, 7 RBI; first baseman Todd Bowman, .341, 7 RBI, 2 homers and sophomore Chris Tyson, .361, 4 doubles.

Tri-captain Kyle Weaver is leading the Lancer pitching staff. Going 35 innings, he has a 4-1 record, an earned run average of 1.80 and four complete games. In addition, he has struck out 30 batters while walking just seven.

Eight game win streak best in school history

Softball sweeps Bridgewater, Lynchburg

Longwood's softball team swept doubleheaders from Bridgewater and Lynchburg over the weekend to stretch its winning streak to eight games, best in school history. The Lady Lancers downed Bridgewater 3-1 and 7-1 Saturday before beating Lynchburg 6-1 and 4-3 Sunday in winning their 10th game in the last 11 outings. Longwood is now 10-5 this spring as they eclipsed the old record of seven consecutive victories established in 1985.

Coach Loretta Coughlin's squad had to work hard for the record Sunday as they trailed in the nightcap 3-0 heading into the home half of the fifth inning. The Lady Lancers would rally though for three runs to tie the score at 3-3 after five.

Junior Ana Litton along with sophomores Lorri Payne and Mari Willen all scored in the fifth for LC. Payne led off with a walk and later scored on a run-producing triple by Litton. Litton then scored on Willen's RBI triple with Willen scoring the tying run on a passed ball. Ironically, Willen's triple appeared to be a home run but Willen stopped at third when she misunderstood Coughlin in the third base coaching box.

Sophomore Crystal Barker scored the winning run in the eighth after reaching on a single and later scoring on an error to wrap up the comeback and secure the winning streak. Willen, Barker, senior Robin Jensen, sophomore Robin Hutcherson and freshman Kerri Johnson each had two hits for LC. Junior Andi Wrenn picked up the pitching win going eight innings and allowing just five hits with four strikeouts and four walks.

"I'm happy for the players," commented Coughlin. "The streak is a good confidence builder. The team has kept their focus good and we need to continue to stay focused and execute the little things. We just want to concentrate on one game at a time."

In the opener, LC scored two runs in the first inning, one each in the fourth and fifth innings and added two in the sixth in winning easily. Willen and Jensen were each 2-4 with two runs each. Willen hit a solo home run, her first at Longwood and first of the season for the Lady Lancers, in the fifth.

In the opener against Bridgewater, LC scored single runs in the first, fourth and fifth innings to support the four-hit pitching of Welpott. Welpott pitched seven innings with four strikeouts while allowing no earned runs.

Litton scored a run in the first after reaching on an error with two outs and coming home on an RBI single by Johnson. Payne, with a one-out single to left in the fourth, scored on an RBI single by Litton. Senior Ginny Henry tacked on the final Lady Lancer run in the fifth as she reached on a single and scored on a single by Jensen.

Longwood finished the opener with 12 hits, including three each from Payne and Willen. Jensen and Johnson each had two hits for the Lady Lancers.

In the second game, BC jumped ahead in the top of the first with an unearned run before LC responded with a run in the second to tie the score at 1-1. Willen opened the second with a single, was sacrificed to second base by Barker, moved to third on a passed ball and scored on an RBI single by Brady.

Longwood added three runs in both the third and fourth innings to take control.

Wrenn went the distance on the mound for the Lady Lancers pitching seven innings allowing six hits with one strikeout and no earned runs. Litton paced the offensive attack with three of LC's 13 hits. Brady, Johnson, Payne, and Willen each had two hits for Longwood.

Through 15 games, Willen leads the Lady Lancer bats with her .415 average (22-53), adding a team-high four doubles, one home run and 13 RBI. Johnson is hitting .408 (20-49) with 10 RBI and is a perfect 8-8 in stolen bases to lead the squad. Payne's average is .353 (18-51) including a team-high 16 runs scored while Litton's average is .333 (17-51) with a team-high four triples and 12 RBI. Jensen's now hitting .326 (15-46) with a team-high six walks and is 6-7 in stolen bases.

Wrenn is 5-2 on the mound with an outstanding 1.75 ERA in 48 innings pitched. Wrenn has allowed 47 hits with 16 strikeouts and 17 walks. Welpott is 4-3, as she's pitched 46 innings allowing 58 hits with an ERA of 3.20. Welpott has struck out 20 with just 13 walks.

Longwood will host NCAA Division I intrastate rival Radford Wednesday in a doubleheader beginning at 2 p.m. at the Armory Field before traveling to Ferrum College to participate in a tournament hosted by Ferrum March 27-28.

Chirpy The Bird

Once upon a time, in a quite suburb, lived a cute, little sparrow named Chirpy. Her eggs had hatched and she spent her days caring for her hungry chicks. She loved to gather food for her young and sail effortlessly through the air on warm spring breezes. She was so very free and happy.

Then one day, she flew directly into a sliding glass door, snapped her neck and died instantly. Her helpless chicks were eaten by a cat.

The End.

Your financial situation is a bit rocky, review alternatives for saving.

CANCER: (June 22 - July 23)

Your enthusiasm this week will jump start all those around you. At home and the workplace, this high level of activity will impress some but may annoy others who would rather plug along at a more leisurely pace. If money is a bit scarce, make sure to at least meet your more important financial obligations. A small windfall may present itself in the nick of time. Approval from a parent may be reassuring, but definitely isn't necessary.

LEO: (July 24- August 23)

Your hard work this week will result in increased opportunities in the workplace. If you are willing to take on additional responsibility, now's the time to let that be known. Your leadership abilities are obvious midweek, and everyone benefits. Your ideas on effective communication need a bit of work. Others may not understand your needs and desires, if necessary find a third party to translate your intentions.

VIRGO: (August 24 - September 23)

There seems to be a great deal of emotional turmoil everywhere you turn this week. This roller coaster of emotion is only surface level, and should be treated as such. A friend is looking for your support early in the week, and although you may not agree with them, your friendship is what's most important here. Sexual energy is at the boiling point, handle yourself responsibly. Don't use your energy for destructive ends, it will come back to haunt you.

LIBRA: (September 24 - October 23)

A joyful attitude can easily become habit forming this week if you look at situations in the right light. Try to suppress your pessimistic comments and worries. Your best results in life happen when you are comfortable and happy. Spend time with your family, they appreciate you more than you think. It will make more sense to keep people on your side, you never know when you may need them later - express your anger in a direct, constructive way. further. Avoid excessive behavior on Saturday.

SCORPIO: (October 24 - November 22)

There is a problem either at home or in the workplace which has been coming to a head for a long time. Take the time to come up with a fresh new approach to the situation, and you may be surprised at the results. It's time to confront those questions which have previously kept you from understanding your own spirituality - if needed, ask the advice of a professional, you probably can't resolve all this uncertainty on your own.

SAGITTARIUS: (November 23 - December 21)

Accentuate the positive this week. A career move you have been only thinking about up until now has become a real possibility. Keep an open mind and the opportunities in a workplace environment will seem endless. Try to gather your creative energies together - the result may be worth some money for you. Your excitement about these activities may not be shared by others the way you would like, but don't let that get you down. Believe in yourself.

CAPRICORN: (December 22 - January 20)

You do not respond to changes in your life easily, but occurrences in your personal life, although they may seem foreign at first, are definitely for the best, if you just give them a chance. Your courageous spirit can help you to overcome bad habits - congratulate yourself on any progress, no matter how trivial it may seem at the time. Take the time to get at the truth in regards to a family member, your understanding and empathy will be important.

AQUARIUS: (January 21 - February 19)

You seem to be spinning your wheel throughout this entire week, with noe noticeable results. Be as patient as you possibly can be, and play everything by the book. Circumstances may seem frustrating, but try to look at the big picture, you are probably on the right track but could use the positive feedback from someone you think highly of, possibly a mentor or parent. The weekend finds you mixing business with pleasure, and the results are favorable.

PISCES: (February 20 - March 20)

Your usual generous and positive spirit will be sorely tested this week. Others may become a bit annoyed at your actions, but hold true to your inner voice talking - you've been lied too. Dig as deep as necessary to find the real truth. Don't expect all those around you to come around to your way of thinking immediately. Your love life is highlighted towards the week's end, spend time with that special someone, but don't let other things suffer for it.

IF THIS WEEK IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You are a very popular person, which makes it very difficult for you to settle down - you usually just want to play. There may be demands on your income, calm down and find a way to pool your resources and economize. Try not to be impulsive and hasty in your personal and romantic relationships, conflicts will inevitably result when you jump in with both feet.

Alphi Phi Omega members struggle to rebuild homes

Alpha Phi Omega fraternity assists Florida storm victims

By Doug Dimarino
Rotunda Staff

• Members of Alpha Phi Omega traveled to Florida during their spring break to help hurricane victims rebuild. Their trip was sponsored by the Wesley Foundation.

While most college students were spending their spring break having fun and basking in the sun, others traveled to Florida to help with the Hurricane Relief Program.

Many people have forgotten about the devastating hurricane that shattered the lives of Florida residents, but not the members of Alpha Phi Omega at Longwood College.

Alpha Phi Omega, founded at Longwood in 1981, is a service fraternity that currently has 29 active brothers and 18 pledges, 12 of which traveled to Florida during spring break to help restore the lives of hurricane victims.

In mid February, the fraternity was contacted by Margie Turbyfill, a representative from the Wesley Foundation, and given the opportunity to devote their time to the hurricane relief as a service project for the year.

The trip was sponsored by the Wesley Foundation, a Methodist student group from the United Methodist Church, which paid all expenses for the group.

The group of 14 were sent to Manfred Camp, where they spent their five days rebuilding the roof of a house that was blown off during the violent storm.

They worked from 8:30a.m.to 4:00p.m. each day and spent their nights in tents, consisting of a wooden frame with a tarp draped over it and equipped with bunkbeds.

The group was amazed at the devastation and destruction caused by the storm, which was very apparent even months after the horrifying night.

Dwayne Barton, Vice President of Alpha Phi Omega, said that he was very distraught by the way that the rich sections of town were cleaned up quickly, while the poor sections were left in shambles. Barton said, "I feel extremely privileged with what I have after seeing how they are still living with the disaster, and it is not being fixed very quickly."

Caroline Komitch and Laurie Sykes, also members of Alpha Phi Omega, said they wished that they could have stayed longer and helped more people. "The people were so nice and thankful." Komitch said, "It felt wonderful to help. It is amazing how much damage is still their after all these months have passed. People are forgetting about it , but things will not go back to normal until others put their hearts in the right place and lend a helping hand in rebuilding the communities."

Sykes added, "I look at it as us joining together to help with the devastation; just saw myself as another helping hand. It was the best vacation I have ever had in my entire life."

The group was not paid for their hard work, but rather compensated with, "A sense of personal satisfaction," said Barton.

He added that the group as a whole found it a great learning experience and a sense of deep appreciation and closeness with all of the others there.

H.S. students challenge administration ban

• Some high school students are up in arms over administration's decision to ban T-shirts mocking school baseball team.

MUKWONAGO, Wis. (AP) Some Mukwonago High School students say the school administration is violating their rights by banning a T-shirt that makes light of the basketball team's sorry season.

"You should be allowed to wear what you want," said freshman Gesica Zielke, 14. "It is an expression of opinion."

Superintendent Paul Strobel said he banned the shirts to keep order.

"Some students said if they saw someone wearing that shirt, they were going to rip it off," he said. "Rather than have fights in the school, I decided to ban the shirts."

Discussion of the T-shirt ban was on the agenda for Monday night's meeting of the School Board.

The shirt is the work of seniors Mike Paprocki and Jeff Searl. The front says "Getting it done 1993." The back says "House of Shame" and lists of the team's 14 conference games and scores. The single victory is marked with a footnote: "Miracles can happen."

About 95 shirts have been sold to students for $10 each.

"It is a total slap in the face," said Chris Fugman, 17, senior captain of the basketball team. "Some say I can't take a joke, but that is not the issue. It is depressing to focus on something offensive."

The creators said no offense was intended.

"I asked students and basketball players before we did it, and no one seemed to think much of it," Paprocki said. "I didn't think it would amount to a hill of beans. But obviously I did not talk to everyone, because it has upset people."

"I don't think students should wear them. It is degrading to the team," said Sasha Taft, 17, a senior.

However, Taft said she doesn't agree with the ban.

"People should not be banned from wearing the shirt," she said.

Student I.D. redesign supported by SGA

By Mindy Oakes
Rotunda Staff

• Contradicting and earlier decision, SGA decides to support the removal of birth dates from the design of student identification cards.

During last week's meeting of Student Government Association, the decision to change student identification cards (ID's) by the removal of student birth dates was made, contradicting an earlier ruling by the Senate.

In last week's meeting, a representative of Blackwell Dining Hall/ARA gave a presentation stressing the importance of changing the student ID's.

The conclusion has been reached that changing the ID's is one step closer to fixing the problem and will help eliminate problems that the Farmville stores are having with students who may appear to be of legal age purchasing alcohol.

According to an SGA senator, the core of this problem stemmed from the poor organization in issuing student ID's. However, some students are at fault as well, because they have given incorrect birth dates to be placed on their pictured ID's for obvious reasons.

In order to rectify the situation, the birth dates will be removed, thus changing the ID's with the new incoming classes.

S. S. number use halted in voting procedure

• A Virginia court ruled that voters shall no longer be required to reveal their social security numbers when they desire to vote. Supporters of the ruling say that social security numbers become to easily available when they are presented for this purpose, and that they may subsequently be used for unscrupulous purposes.

RICHMOND, Va (AP) Virginia must either stop requiring that people reveal their Social Security number when they register to vote or stop putting those numbers on records that are open to the public, a federal appeals court says.

A three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed a lower court ruling in a case brought by a man who gave up his right to vote rather than disclose his Social Security number.

"The statutes at issue compel a would-be voter in Virginia to consent to the possibility of a profound invasion of privacy when exercising the fundamental right to vote," the court panel said in Tuesday's ruling.

Voter registration lists are sold to candidates for office, political parties, elected officials and nonprofit groups that promote voting.

The appeals court agreed that someone who got a Social Security number from the list could steal a person's government benefits, credit cards or paychecks.

A state law that takes effect July 1 would bar Social Security numbers from being on the lists that are sold.

David Parsons, a spokesman for the Virginia attorney general's office, said the appeals court ruling would be reviewed with the State Board of Elections before a decision is made on whether to appeal.

The ruling came in the case of Marc Alan Greidinger of Falmouth, a lawyer for the Richmond-based appeals court. He has been unable to vote since he refused to give his Social Security number to a voter registrar in Stafford County in 1991.

He sued election officials last year, contending that the requirement unconstitutionally burdened his right to vote. U.S. District Judge James R. Spencer of Richmond upheld the law.

Community service gets a boost from VACOOL conference

By Carol Ann Semones
Rotunda Staff

• Trey Piersall, coordinator of community service at Longwood College, recently attended a conference to help better organize community service activities and to network with other colleges. This conference was organized by the Virginia Campus Outreach Opportunity League (VACOOL).

Trey Piersall, community service coordinator of Longwood (through the G.I.V.E. Clearinghouse) and student, attended a conference recently organized by a group known as VA COOL.

Through this conference, VA COOL (the Virginia Campus Outreach Opportunity League) offered students and faculty from every campus in Virginia the opportunity to gather to share ideas and become better educated and inspired about campus-based community service.

The conference, entitled "Taking Responsibility for Community and Country: Service-Learning on Campus," was held March 19-20 at Shenandoah University in Winchester, Virginia.

Discussion and workshops offered ideas about the enforcement of the mission of VA COOL, which is "to promote and empower campus-based community service," at Longwood and the other college communities of Virginia.

VA COOL is a non-profit statewide organization. It is in its third year of existence, is based in Richmond, and receives full funding from the commission on National and Community Service.

PERSPECTIVES

Student apathy long-standing Longwood tradition

This past week at Longwood has been quiet, almost uneventful. We sit securely on our plot of ground in a state of lethargy, not seeming to care about what is going on around campus. Our interests center on weekend. The days between Sunday and Friday are only part of the ritual to prepare us for the release.

Who cares whether or not the Rotunda has been painted, Wheeler is being painted, we have a new Longwood bus, the steps in back of Lankford were widened for our convenience, land is being cleared in the back of Cox, the mall was dug up, a few rules were changed. We placidly accept these facts as something the school owes the whole student body.

Who cares? Let's just sit back in our cozy part of the state and wait for the weekend. Longwood will be here forever.

Does that sound familiar? Like something you would read in just about any issue of the Rotunda? Well, this is no recent diatribe spouting from the pen of the Rotunda Editorial Board. Instead, it is an excerpt from an editorial in a 1968 issue of the Rotunda.

This obviously tongue-in-cheek piece is ample evidence of something we have feared — that student apathy, instead of being a recent development, has been plaguing this campus for years.

The college students of today are not the only ones who attended school for something other than a sense of academic ambition. The idea of a "gentleman's C" (a grade which young men attending college could receive and still retain their honor) or a woman attempting to get her MRS (get it? Her Mrs.) have been present in academic circles for centuries in the case of men, decades for women.

However, it is within our grasp to change all that. It is early enough in our lives to change the situation in which we have become mired.

Students should take advantage of the opportunities available to them at college. Skills should be learned and polished. Areas of personal interest should be explored.

But most important, now is the time that students should break free of the ideas that have bound them, ideas created and reinforced by twelve years of pre-college education wherein they were not encouraged to ask questions, but instead were tacitly taught to sit in classrooms like mindless drones, accepting as gospel the words of the teacher, never daring to even intimate that there might be another side to the story or, god forbid, a flaw to their reasoning.

A college classroom should not be silent but for the voice of a professor attempting futilely to elicit some response from the students staring mutely at a spot somewhere above the left shoulder of the instructor and dreaming of the parties that were and the revelries that are yet to come.

Instead, the room should ring with insightful questions and telling comments. Teachers should be pushed to their limits. And students should struggle to achieve their academic potential.

This is the time that we must break away from the rut that Longwood students have been in for the last twenty-five years. We must seize the day now, or the hope for a changed tomorrow will be lost.

Lampoon is marvelous

By Erin McCay
Editor in Chief

I have a few words to say to the members of NotOnlyNews.

Your April Fool's Day edition spoofing the Rotunda was fantastic! I can't remember the last time I have laughed like that, and I know that it was the bright spot of an otherwise dreadful week.

It is wonderful to see that there are still some people on this campus who have a sense of humor, as well as the wit to express it.

Though some of the barbs did hit home (ouch! Can I join the javelin catching team?), that was only because they were fairly close to the mark. We at the Rotunda, er ah, I mean I have a tendency to be somewhat, shall we say, lofty, in my pronouncements, and every so often I do need to be taken down a peg.

Anyway, I merely wanted to express my thanks to NotOnlyNews for their, dare I say it, brilliant lampoon of the Rotunda. Harvard watch out!

Opinion

Stubbs security vital

By Heather Moulin
Rotunda Staff

The Stubbs Residence Hall is the center of sorority activities. All of the social greek sororities on campus use the building for chapter meetings and other gatherings. This causes Stubbs to be a major traffic area on campus. During any given week, a large number of sorority women come and go from the building. One fact that may tend to be overlooked in the midst of all of this activity is that Stubbs is also a dormitory. Many female students call Stubbs home.

It is for this reason that the issue of Stubbs security capacity is so important. Much attention is payed to the security of residents in the highly trafficked high-rises, but it seems that Stubbs security is never regarded as an issue. It should be considered, based solely on the number of people who come into or go out of the building so often, but even more so in light of some recent events that have taken place in the building.

Stubbs has a large lounge just off of the main entrance corridor. This lounge was vandalized before Spring Break when an unknown party stole furniture from it. A window in the lounge was also broken out during an earlier event. Also occurring recently in Stubbs was an act of trespassing by a Farmville male.

All of these occurrences have caused some residents to think twice before assuming their safety in the building. Some residents feel particularly vulnerable to intrusion because of the fact that Stubbs is located directly on Griffin boulevard, a non-campus street. Others feel singled out, because Stubbs houses the largest number of female residents.

Stubbs security is not, as of yet, a major problem. Most residents feel confident about their personal safety. Amy Kappel, a second floor resident, has seen men wandering the halls who look out of place but still says, "I think Stubbs is safe; it's really easy to look at people coming in and tell if they belong or not so I never really have felt unsafe. I still lock my door at night, though."

Another positive comment was made by first floor Resident Assistant Hope Jones who thinks that "the desk staff really know what to look for as far as who to let in, and they know what questions to ask. The residents are also really conscious about propping doors and the danger of it, so I don't think that security is a big problem here at all."

Hopefully, these feelings of security will continue for Stubbs residents as well as for sorority women who use the building, and no further security problems will arise in the building.

ELLEN GOODMAN

It is time to be blunt about the lesson of Dr. David Gunn's murder outside a women's health clinic on the morning of March 10: Terrorism works.

It's time to acknowledge that Randall Terry, the military strategist of Operation Rescue, was absolutely right: "We have found the weak link and it's the doctors."

Nearly three weeks have passed since Michael Griffin, a man who found a welcome home for his private demons among right-to-life extremists, shot the Florida doctor in the back. In these weeks, those who support abortion rights have often taken comfort from the public reaction and from political action.

At least, pro-choice people say to each other, all Americans can now see that the right-to-life movement has been captured by its militants. At least ... the president has the chance to nominate a pro-choice justice to the Supreme Court. At least ... a Senate committee sent the Freedom of Choice Act on its way to the floor. At least ... a House subcommittee approved a bill making it a crime to obstruct a woman's access to a clinic.

But the truth is that none of this will matter very much if there are fewer and fewer medical people willing to provide abortions.

What's most significant is what did not happen after Dr. Gunn's death. We did not see a line of doctors offering their services at the clinic doors.

Ask Dr. Warren Pearse, the executive director of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, if his phone lines were jammed by doctors wanting to help in the days after a colleague's death. Well, he says, "our phones were jammed. They were jammed by people who said, 'you continue to support murder.'"

In Florida, Dr. Gunn's state, two more physicians quit. The last remaining provider in Brevard County, Dr. Randall Whitney, goes to work wearing a bulletproof vest and carrying a paper bag to put over his face so his photo won't end up on a "Wanted" poster.

In Wisconsin, Dr. George Woodward writes about the death threat he received. He has been given just weeks to leave the Planned Parenthood clinic or else.

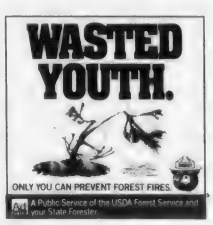
In Washington state, Dr. Karen Nichols, who now spends half her time performing abortions because there are fewer doctors, admits to being harassed as well. She says philosophically, "It takes guts and courage to do abortions. You have to be committed."

The ranks of the doctors are older than they were in past years and sparser. They are populated increasingly as well by believers, those who are "committed," not just to patients, but to their rights. Indeed, by best estimates fewer than 3,500 providers perform the bulk of the 1.5 million abortions a year. They are the weak link indeed.

Dr. Nichols describes the situation simply. "If more physicians did the procedures, we wouldn't even be talking about harassment." The more doctors, says ACOG's Dr. Pearse, the harder it would be to target any one. "If a large number each did ten abortions a week it would go relatively unnoticed."

No one is suggesting that doctors who are morally opposed to abortions should perform them. But 84 percent of practicing ob-gyns describe themselves as pro-choice, while only 32 percent perform any abortions, and only 4 percent do more than 10 a month.

It isn't just fear that has reduced these ranks. Doctors have assumed they could refer patients to low-cost clinics and specialists rather than doing abortions themselves. Many medical schools and residency programs virtually stopped training doctors in the procedure. Contrary to what pro-life literature says about the "abortion business," the pay is low. There is more prestige in performing hysterectomies and more pleasure in delivering babies.



But today intimidation is the greatest threat to abortion rights, greater than hostile judges or pro-life legislatures. It's a threat to doctors and their families and also to their patients. And while it shouldn't take "guts and courage" to practice medicine, sometimes it does.

What sort of courage is needed? The simplest act is for medical professionals to ensure that more schools train students to perform abortions and that more hospitals have facilities. They are beginning to do this. The harder act is for groups of doctors to balance the concerns of safety with the demands of conscience. To support doctors who provide abortions — and, yes, to join them.

These are the facts. One doctor has been killed. Others are threatened and still more are being harassed. Somehow, the weak link must find strength in numbers.

TKE presented Longwood's first professional wrestling match

350 attend TKE fundraiser

Professional wrestlers hit Longwood

By Chris Murray
Rotunda Staff

On Thursday, March18, Lancer Gym was transformed into a professional wrestling arena to host the 1st ever professional wrestling match at Longwood College.

The event consisted of four individual matches and a finale, a ten man battle royal, which had all ten wrestlers in the ring. The last one to not thrown out by another wrestler won.

Top matches included: Tim Horner beating Tom Pritchard, Tracey Smothers pinning the Dirty White Boy (he looked pretty clean to me), and the Rock 'n' Roll express surging over the Heavenly Bodies. Tracey Smothers triumphed in the battle royal and claiming a $5,000 reward.

Individuals may recall watching the once famed Ricky Morton and Robert Gibson, the Rock 'n' Roll Express and their colorful bandannas and wrestling moves from years ago on T.V.

Well they've been knocked down to the "minor leagues." The duo have been wrestling together for about ten years and have claimed a list seemingly a mile long of titles. However, now their lucky if they can get any applause.

Despite the aches, pains, bruises, and knee braces, Morton explains "wrestling's our life, that's all we know. I imagine we'll be wrestling until we can't climb into the ring anymore and even then we'll probably have someone push us in."

When asked if they had any advice for Longwood students, they replied "stay in school, get an education. You don't wanna have to keep getting body slammed for a living."

The event was hosted by Tau Kappa Epsilon. An estimated 350 people were able to watch the show.

TKE President Troy Davenport explains "this was a fundraiser and a form of entertainment for the student body and I believe it was a success."

Because the event was such a success, the TKE's are considering making this an annual event. Davenport feels the attendance could have been better, and blames it on a lack of publicity and a sub-par wrestling organization.

Standing on My Knees presents dark side of schizophrenia

Alpha Psi Omega and the Underground Players will present John Olive's Standing on My Knees from Thursday April 1 to Saturday April 3 in the studio theatre in Jarman Auditorium. The show runs approximately one and a half hours and has one ten minute intermission.

The play deals with schizophrenia and how dramatically it affects not only the lives of its victims but those who come into contact with them.

The director of the production is senior D. Leslie Young who directed the most recent show in the Black Box theatre, Fugue in a Nursery.

About the show, Young said "Mental illness is an important topic that the Underground Players had yet to touch on. This play deals with our generation directly. Catherine is in her early twenties; she had a future. The frightening truth is that there are many Catherines out there, you may know one or not realize that you know one; you could be one and not know it yet."

The cast includes seniors Ann Renee Heim and Jonathon Church, junior Cynthia Callahan, and freshman Anne McMorrow.

Heim plays Catherine, the young schizophrenic poet who has just been released from the hospital and tries desperately to return her life "back to normal," but realizes that, as her psychiatrist Joanne (played by Callahan) has said, that she will never be "normal."

In regard to her character, Heim said, "Schizophrenia usually surfaces in people within our age bracket, to know that there are people out there who seem just like you or I, but suffer as Catherine suffers both scares the hell out of me and makes me extremely thankful for what I have.

In the course of the play, Catherine encounters the obstacles that everyday life presents her: dealings with her newfound lover, Robert (portrayed by Church), and her friend/publisher Alice (McMorrow), and runs from the thing that she loves and detests most, her poetry.

Standing on My Knees is McMorrow's third Underground show. When asked what draws her work in the Black Box shows she replied, "there's something about being so close to the audience. When the fourth wall is completely disintegrated, you could go and sit on an audience member's lap if the role required it and you can't do that on mainstage. That's it."

The conservative theater-goer is advised that the show contains both mature language and scenes and may not be for all viewers. The show begins at 7:00pm in the studio theatre in Jarman.

Untamed Heart a moving romance

By Carol Semones
Rotunda Staff

Untamed Heart
Starring: Christian Slater, Marisa Tomai

In "Untamed Heart" starring Christian Slater and Marisa Tomei, a young man orphaned at a young age with a heart disease fall in love with a young, potentially tacky, waitress.

While Caroline, the waitress played by Marisa Tomei, struggles to find her place in life, Adam, the busboy played by Christian Slater, struggles against his heart condition to continue his life.

Caroline, who searching for a man to love, has been jilted by many less appealing types while Adam admires her secretly. Not until Adam saves her from harm on her way home one night does she notice him.

After giving him a chance, Caroline finds Adam to be an interesting and intelligent man with the pure innocence and sincere words of a young boy. She finds her place with Adam who possesses all of the qualities she pretended to find in the previous men in her life.

Christian Slater does an excellent job as Adam and makes the audience love him as much as Caroline does. The character of Adam is appealing to both men and women due to the combination of physical and genuine sensitivity.

The desperation and need of Caroline and the innocence and sensitivity of Adam make this an unforgettable couple and an unforgettable movie.

Queen rules

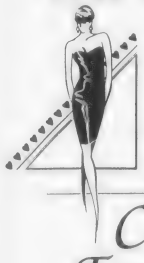
By Jennie Fennell
Copy Editor

The anticipation has been in the air for the queen to hop upon her throne ever since the renovation began; Dairy Queen is finally open, and much to the satisfaction of townspeople and students.

I decided to skip the Rotunda Market scene [for only one day, I swear], and invest in a Blizzard at the infamous D. Q. The Heathbar Blizzard was satisfactory, but I was informed that the Mudpie Blizzard did not meet expectations, as it was rather bland.

Typical first-day problems occurred during my feast. My hungry friend was forced to wait for what seemed to be several decades for the apparently misdirected cheeseburger. Finally, as patience was decreasing, my friend received her food and we had no more reasons to complain.

Having a Dairy Queen in Farmville is quite a blessing to be appreciated and not to be taken for granted. We all are aware that some companies have skipped town on us before, and so I will frequent Dairy Queen whenever possible.



Maybe tomorrow, the next day, and the next day . . .

Free market policies are implemented in China

• China, one of the world's last bastions for Marxist thought, Monday decided to implement free-market policies. Other changes include the removal of almost all the old revolutionary leadership of the country. These changes follow the death of Deng Xiaoping.

BEIJING (AP) China's parliament revised the constitution Monday to officially adopt senior leader Deng Xiaoping's free-market policies.

The National People's Congress also approved the last members of a new government chosen by elderly powerbrokers in hopes of avoiding a power struggle as the old revolutionary leadership dies off.

The revised constitution commits China to replacing Marxist central planning with a "socialist market economy" Deng's name for Communist Party political power with free markets.

Often tailored to fit the prevailing political climate, the constitution was merely changed to reflect the economic reforms that already are transforming China into a fast-developing, market-driven nation.

A rising star at the forefront of implementing Deng's policies, Vice Premier Zhu Rongji, was approved Monday as second-in-command under Premier Li Peng in the new Cabinet.

The 64-year-old former mayor of Shanghai has been acting as China's trouble-shooting economics czar, and his promotion to first vice premier could help him consolidate a leading role in formulating economic policy.

Lawmakers approved three other vice premiers, eight state councilors and a full Cabinet for five-year terms Monday. Li was elected by the nearly 3,000 delegates Sunday.

All of the appointments were decided earlier in secret by Deng and other Communist elders who remain China's most powerful men.

The voting swept away the few remaining aging revolutionaries from top posts in an attempt to ensure a smooth shift in power to a new generation of leaders after the death of Deng, 88.

In a change from previous practice, most of the seven members of the party Politburo Standing Committee were also given key government jobs. Only a few of the new Cabinet members are regarded as ideological hardliners, although leaders of the conservative camp remain influential behind the scenes.

Among the new vice premiers are Foreign Minister Qian Qichen, credited with restoring China's international standingg after the crackdown on the 1989 democracy movement, and outgoing Foreign Trade Minister Li Lanqing, under whom exports surged more than 20 percent last year.

Also in the Cabinet is Hu Qili, a former member of the ruling Communist Party's top body who was purged for opposing the 1989 military crackdown. He was made minister of electronics industry.

The official Xinhua News Agency said the new Cabinet is younger, ranging in age from 47 to 66, and better educated than the previous group.

Zhu, who has quickly risen through party and government ranks in the past year, reportedly was considered a possible candidate for premier. But in a bid for stability, party elders decided against dumping Li, who is unpopular for his leading role in the 1989 crackdown and is more cautious about reform.

Korean women reimbursed for forced prostitution

• Women who were forced to act as "comfort women" to Japanese soldiers during World War II will receive monetary copensation for their forced prostitution.

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) Women who were forced into prostitution by the Japanese army in World War II will be paid financial support by South Korea, a senior official said Monday.

Vice Foreign Minister Hong Soon-young called the decision "part of the government's efforts to heal the wounds of the tragic past for the Korean people."

Each of about 140 surviving women still in South Korea will receive about $6,400 plus about $250 a month, and survivors living abroad will get the $6,400 lump sum, he said.

The Japanese government is conducting an investigation and is expected to announce soon whether it also will compensate the victims, Hong said.

Historians say tens of thousands of Korean women were forced to become sex and labor slaves so-called "comfort women" for the soldiers of Japan, which colonized the Korean peninsula from 1910 through the end of World War II in 1945.

Hong said the Korean government would not ask Tokyo to pay compensation, but urged Japan to show "sincerity" in its ongoing inquiry into the matter.

"Tokyo should accept the tragic history in a humble manner and relentlessly strive not to repeat it," he said.

Several Korean women filed claims with a Tokyo court last year seeking compensation. Hong said the results of the Tokyo government's inquiry will be announced soon.

The issue has strained relations between South Korea and Japan. The victims, their families and civic activists have for months staged protests near the Japanese Embassy in Seoul demanding Japan's apology and compensation.

Boris Yeltsin garners support from Hawaiin legislature

• Russian President Yeltsin has received a resolution supporting his actions from Hawaii's state legislature.

HONOLULU (AP) Russian President Boris Yeltsin may be suffering from a lack of supporters in his own country's legislature, but he doesn't have to look further than Hawaii to find some overseas.

Forty of the state House's 51 members have signed a resolution stating support for Yeltsin's continued presidency. Rep. Gene Ward, who introduced the measure, sent Yeltsin a letter of moral support along with a copy of the signed resolution by tax Thursday, according to a Ward aide.

"I and other members of the Hawaii State Legislature fully support your reformative efforts, even as those efforts are being seriously threatened by various factions within your country," the letter read.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) Seven irreplaceable artifacts, including a pair of 5-foot snowshoes, were taken last week from an exhibit case in Brown University's anthropology department.

"I feel terrible," said Professor Shepard Krech III, who owned the snowshoes. "It just seems very predatory for someone to come in and take those particular pieces."

The snowshoes were crafted for Krech in the early 1970s when he lived in northwestern Canada with the Gwich'in Indian tribe. Krech followed the tribe on trapping expeditions for lynx and marten and on caribou hunts during a 16-month research project.

Among other missing objects are a carved Australian aboriginal spearthrower belonging to Professor Richard Gould; four vessels from the Aymara, a Peruvian tribe descended from the Incas, belonging to Professor Dwight Heath, and an Aymara calabash cup belonging to the university's Haffenreffer Museum of Anthropology in Bristol.

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) Israel's main Arab adversaries put off a decision on resuming talks with the Jewish state, saying Monday they need time to discuss with Washington conditions to get the process back on track.

After two days of meetings, Syria, Lebanon, Jordan and the PLO also criticized the United States for failing to pressure Israel to repatriate 396 Palestinians, whose Dec. 17 expulsion led to the suspension of peace talks.

They argued Washington had done little to push the peace process forward since it began 17 months ago and said they were suspicious of Israel's contacts with the Clinton administration.

DURHAM (AP) A man whose wife killed their two children has sued Duke University, saying the school's hospital was negligent in its psychiatric care of her.

The suit also accuses Duke of substituting economic judgment for medical judgment by discharging the woman because her insurance benefits had run out.

Richard Merritt, a spokesman for Duke Medical Center, said Tuesday the university will not comment on lawsuits.

First win over Flames Since 1987

Lancer baseball defeats Liberty 8-7

Senior Todd Bowman hit a towering 3-run home run in the third inning and sophomore Brian Bassett smashed a bases-loaded triple in the sixth as NCAA Division II Longwood rallied to defeat visiting Division I Liberty University 8-7 in baseball action at the newly-renovated Lancer Field Monday afternoon.

It was the Lancers' first victory over the Flames since 1987, and only the second win over Liberty in 12 overall meetings. LC improved its record to 12-4-1 while Liberty dropped to 6-5.

After spotting the visitors a 4-0 lead after just two-and-one-half innings of play on the strength of a 3-run homer from Sheldon Bream, brother of Atlanta Braves' Sid Bream, Longwood rallied back beginning with Bowman's blast. With one out in the bottom of the third, Bassett walked and classmate Jeff Toms singled to left before Bowman stepped up and crushed the ball to deep left center field. The ball easily cleared the fence over the 375-foot marker and landed within a couple feet of the parking lot off South Main Street. Just like that, the Lancers trimmed the advantage to 4-3.

"Bowman's home run really gave us hope at that point," commented coach Charles 'Buddy' Bolding. "He made the most of the opportunity and made them (Liberty) aware that we weren't going to quit."

The Flames added two runs in the fourth and one in the fifth with Longwood scoring a lone run in the fourth on a run-producing double by sophomore Ray Roddy. The hit scored freshman Chris Hatcher who had reached on a single. Heading into the home half of the sixth inning Liberty led 7-4.

The Lancers refused to quit and fought back in the sixth. With the bases loaded and two outs, Bassett stepped to the plate and smacked one to the base of the fence in right-center just to the right of the 400-foot sign. Just missing a grand slam, Bassett's triple tied the score with Bassett proceeding home on an errant relay throw by the shortstop to give Longwood an 8-7 lead it would not relinquish.

Liberty tried to respond in the next inning putting two men on with one out, but senior Kyle Weaver took over on the mound for Longwood and promptly struck out the next two hitters. Weaver finished the final 2 and 2/3 innings with four strikeouts to pick up his second save of the spring.

"This win was very important, especially now with all the bad weather we've been having," added Bolding. "What can I say about Kyle, he was picture-perfect again."

Bowman wound up 2-4 with the home run and three RBI, Bassett 1-3 with the triple and three RBI, while Roddy was 1-3 with a double and an RBI. Freshman Jason Gross (3-0) got the win pitching 1 1/3 innings in middle relief of senior starter Wyatt Flippen, who went five innings.

Longwood swept a doubleheader from Virginia State in Farmville Friday afternoon 9-6 and 7-2. The Lancers got a three-run homer from Shawn Jones, his fourth, in the first game. Jeff Toms and Chris Hatcher had three hits each in the opener. Bowman and Bill Reeves had run- scoring triples in the second contest. Pitchers Bart van Zoest (1-0) and Jason Gross were the winning pitchers Friday.

Longwood's baseball team, now 12-4-1, has been ranked 24th in this week's Collegiate Baseball Division II poll. The Lancers, 32-9 last season, are seeking their third straight trip to the NCAA Division II Tournament.

Fresh off an 8-7 win over Liberty University Monday, Longwood has beaten Shippensburg and Norfolk State over the past ten days. Both the Raiders and the Spartans had been ranked in the top 25 earlier in the season.

Armstrong State (28-4) is ranked number one in this week's poll. North Atlantic Region teams ranked ahead of Longwood are Slippery Rock (14-2) and Mansfield (8-7).

Thursday, Longwood is scheduled to host St. Paul's for two at 1:00 and Sunday North Carolina A&T will visit for a twinbill starting at 1:00.

Steve Crute

Senior breaks school record

Crute named player of the week

Senior golfer Steve Crute, who set a new school record for a 54-hole score at the Camp Lejuene Marine Tournament March 26-28, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week by the Longwood Sports Information Office for the period March 21-28.

Crute had an outstanding three rounds of golf, shooting a 75-76-73 for a new record of 224, as he helped the Lancers to their second-best 54-hole score ever. The team finished at 307-310-313-930 for the tournament, placing 23rd out of 31 teams.

Longwood's top golfer in the fall with a 77.6 average, Crute also shot 80-82-82-244 to win the Pinehurst Collegiate Tournament March 8-10. A co-captain this spring, he was the 1991 Virginia College Division State Champion.

A graduate of Bluestone High School in Clarksville, Crute is a physical education major.

Crute leads Lancers in Camp LeJuene Tourney

Longwood senior golfer Steve Crute set a new school record for a 54-hole score at the Camp Lejuene Marine Tournament in Jacksonville, N.C., last weekend, as the Lancers finished at 307-310-313-930, placing 23rd out of 31 teams.

Crute shot 75-76-73-224 to break the old mark of 226 set by senior Frank Davide during the 1991 season. Crute had an outstanding three rounds of golf as he helped the Lancers to their second-best 54-hole score ever.

Virginia Commonwealth University won the tournament with a total round score of 872. Geoffrey Goldstein of VCU was the tournament's medalist with scores of 67-71-75-213, followed by Jim Arnold of Elon with 75-67-74-216.

Davide, a Lancer co-captain this spring along with Crute, and freshman Eric Levin helped the Lancers with strong performances, posting scores of 79-76-79-234 and 75-79-78-232, respectively. Other scores for the Lancers include senior John Benton 78-81-83-242 and freshman John Vaughn 84-84-79-247.

Longwood was scheduled to play Tuesday in a three-team match against Radford and VMI at Smith Mountain Lake, and resume action again this weekend at the South Carolina State Tournament at Orangeburg, S.C., Friday through Sunday.

Lacrosse wades through wins

Longwood's lacrosse team took its 1-0 record south this past Sunday to play a doubleheader in Greensboro, North Carolina. The first game pitted the Lady Lancers against first-year team Greensboro College, while the second foe was traveling Davidson College.

The Lady Lancers were unpleasantly surprised upon their arrival on the field, as there was not an inch of dry ground. At least four inches of mud coated the playing surface, with several large water puddles proving treacherous in key places on the field. Longwood adjusted quite well to these adverse conditions in their warmups, and then carried that confidence into the game, beating Greensboro easily by a score of 13-1.

"The field conditions were terrible, to put it nicely," commented coach Sandy Bridgeman, who also went on to say that she was pleased with her team's play in the obviously never-experienced-before conditions.

"Although they [Greensboro] are a very young team, they did create some franticness for our team, which affected our poise and shook up our control," said Bridgeman. "We could've controlled the time better on our attack by working our plays, but we did what we had to and came out with a good win."

Another aspect Bridgeman favored was that all of her players got a good amount of playing time and proved to be very effective in their respective positions.

Senior Trish McCormick led all scorers with four goals for the LC squad, while senior Tonia Harris, and freshmen classmates Natalie Buritsch and Jean Rehbein added two goals apiece. Contributing with one goal each were senior Jenny Wuebker, sophomore Sara Hogan and freshman Wendy Yancey.

After a brief rest, the Lady Lancers retook the field to meet Davidson College. With a so-called home-field advantage from the first game, the already mud-coated Lady Lancers defeated their adversaries by a margin of 10-7.

Of the second game Bridgeman said, "I was very impressed with Davidson. They are a well-coached team and possess good skills with a good attack. They kept it out of our hands, but our defense was very settled and communicated well on the cuts and switches. Jenny Wuebker and Leslie Seay worked well on the defensive wings, when Davidson packed all of their attack in and worked their plays, and Teuta Haxhaj played their leading scorer tough."

Junior Anita Warford took charge for Longwood by scoring four goals, while McCormick punched in three of her own, capping off a nice scoring day for herself. Buritsch added two and senior co-captain Denise Hanley scored her first goal of the season.

"This win really showed our conditioning and mental toughness, playing not only back-to-back, but in the poor conditions," concluded Bridgeman. "Our legs weren't as fresh, but we did what we had to."

On Tuesday, in a close match-up, LC defeated Plymouth State (New Hampshire) 14-13. The Lady Lancers remained undefeated in their first four games.

Thursday, the Lady Lancers will put their 4-0 record on the line to face Greensboro at home on First Avenue Field at 4:00. On Saturday, Longwood travels to Guilford to end up the week.

Baseball plan would increase minority hiring

By Ronald Blum
AP Sportswriter

Major league baseball announced a plan Monday to bring more minorities into all levels of the game, from the team owner to the hot dog vendor and the fan.

"Major league baseball has made great progress in minority hiring over the last six years and will continue that effort," Bud Selig, chairman of baseball's ruling Executive Council, said in a statement.

"This program is broader and more diverse than anything we've tried before and will assure, through the minority vending components, that more jobs and therefore more money is generated for minority group members."

The Executive Council said teams:

must include minority candidates for jobs throughout their organizations "within a reasonable time frame."

should try to attract minorities as investors when shares of teams with multiple owners are up for sale.

should have "appropriate minority participation" on their boards of directors.

must seek to use minority-owned vendors and insist that non-minority vendors are equal-opportunity employers.

must "make a significant effort to attract minorities as fans."

should have employees undergo sensitivity training "unless clearly unnecessary."

should increase community and charitable activities.

Following the remarks of Cincinnati Reds owner Marge Schott, who received a one-year suspension for statements offensive to blacks, Jews and Japanese, the Rev. Jesse Jackson threatened boycotts unless baseball increased minority hiring. Baseball officials say 17 percent of front-office employees are minorities, up from 2 percent in 1987.

Top Ten Ways to Kiss Up to Your Professor (It's Almost Exam Time, Folks!!)

10. Call him or her by their first name in class- professors are human too!

9. Ask lots of questions, especially long, complex ones on a subject far removed from the lecture topic. Independant thought is encouraged.

8. If another student is not paying attention to the lecture, take the opportunity to chastize the student on the professor's behalf. Stand up, point to the offensive student, and loudly criticize him or her. Your thoughtfullness will be appreciated.

7. Show your interest in the topic by pointing out any mistakes the professor may make while lecturing.

6. Make a point of hanging around during all of your professor's office hours. He or she will be glad to be spared from those long, tedious hours which could otherwise be spent in grading tests, paperwork, and appointments with other students. Mindless chatter is a good way to be entertaining.

5. Sit in the front row of every class and scream out the answers to questions before anyone else has a chance to contribute. If other students have the gall to say something, mock them.

4. Make numerous 2:00 a.m. phone calls "just to say hi."

3. Follow your professor around campus all day long, staring with mute adoration as they attempt to ignore you.

2. Ask frequently about extra-credit. Don't take no for an answer.

1. Make your research paper triple the maximum allowable length, and don't use boring details like quotes and figures. Stream-of-consciousness writing will be a welcome change of pace.

"There are several kinds of stories, but only one difficult kind— the humorous."—Mark Twain

A Fish Story

Once upon a time there were two young fish: Sue, and Dave. They were the best of friends, and they loved to play and swim in the ocean blue. They were very, very happy.

Then one day, when they became adults, Sue— a much larger fish—ate Dave.

The End.

LC to host Pow Wow

By Heather Lustig
Rotunda Staff

A Native American Pow Wow, to be hosted at Longwood, is scheduled for September 10 and 11, 1993. Brian Bates and Crystal Mitchell, 1992 Anthropology graduates, were the original promoters of the local Pow Wow.

According to Dr. James W. Jordan, Professor of Anthropology, in September and October, 1991, Bates and Mitchell got the idea through taking a senior Anthropology class, taught by Dr. Douglas Dalton.

The pair began to travel across the south-eastern United States, visiting various established Pow Wows, one of which was in Gillford, North Carolina.

At this particular Pow Wow, they met Ray Little Turtle, a Cherokee Indian.

In early December, 1991, Bates and Mitchell held a lecture on Native American Pow Wows, showing video tapes of the dances. Members of the audience approached the students and suggested having a Pow Wow on campus.

Said Jordan, "We [Bates, Mitchell, Dalton, and Jordan] drank punch and thought, 'why not?'"

With the help of Jayne Fanshaw, who eventually became, according to Jordan, a key organizer, what began as a class project transformed into a pseudo festival that will present Native American dancing, tradition, and folklore.

The Longwood-hosted Native American Pow Wow will serve many different purposes, Jordan continued. One of the main purposes, he says, "is to host a Native American Inter-tribal Pow Wow cultural performance celebration. The performance is designed to help the student population, college community, and citizens of southside Virginia to become more conscious of domestic cultural pluralism and minority issues among Native American populations, and to promote intercultural ties and understandings in an increasingly independent world."

"The Pow Wow will consist of various Native American tribes," explained Jordan. "Although the dances will be uniform, the regalia [Native American dress] will be according to the tribe."

The majority of the dancing will be "dramatic-religious-ritual." The stories are from the past and the dancing is a "visual, oral, tactile tradition that passes the stories on to the next generation," stated Jordan.

Another important facet of the Pow Wow is that it's an assertion of the Native American culture.

The Native Americans who will be participating in the Pow wow are from small tribes consisting of between 50 and 100 people.

Jordan explained that these tribes are "too small to assert their Indianness."

In addition to the dancing, vendors will be selling various Native American items. Wares shall include: food, craft items, art, articles of clothing, books, pamphlets, and video and audio cassettes.

About 1,000 to 2,000 people are expected to participate in the Pow Wow said Jordan. It will be located in Barlow and Ller fields and a minimal admission fee will be charged.

"In a sense," said Jordan, "I would have never thought of it. 15 years ago, I tried to start an Archaeological field school. I have dug up Native American artifacts, yet, now they are coming alive and speaking to me. It will be real life happening right in front of me. I will see it, hear it, touch it, taste it. Whereas before I used to dig up the dead artifacts, now they will come alive and speak to me."

Longwood graduate Brian Bates introduced Dr. James Jordan to O.L. Durham. Bates met Durham at an Indian Pow Wow and arranged for the Indian to visit the Summer Field School. Pictured in front of Durham's 18 foot Sioux lodge are Durham, Bates and Dr. Jordan. Longwood will host a Pow Wow this September.

Vandalism continues on campus

By Debbie Wilson
Rotunda Staff

At this point in the semester, damages to dorms are lower than they are normally, according to the Business Affairs Office.

Every month the damages to common areas (study lounges, hallways, and stairwells) are assessed. Individual rooms are not looked at until everyone leaves, at the end of each semester.

The last available data gathered from the Business Affairs Office includes September 1992 through February 28, 1993. According to this information, the damages in dollar amount for each dorm are as follows: Frazer $4,632; Curry $1,093; South Cunningham $707; Cox $619; North Cunningham $490; Main Cunningham $292; French $277; ARC $248; Main Tabb $212; Wheeler $145; Stubbs $93; South Tabb $68; South Ruffner $0.

As far as the types of vandalism, damaged ceiling tiles seem to be number one on the list this year. Fire extinguishers are always a problem also. Residents are charged not only with clean-up, but also with refilling them. Broken windows and elevator damage usually make up some of the biggest expenses, but so far this semester they are not excessive.

Theft of "No Smoking" signs, water fountains being torn from the walls, and door numbers being taken are among other types of damage done to the dorms. In addition, one or more individuals glued the locks on ninth floor Frazer. The approximate cost of repairing this damage was $1,000.

Frazer consistently has the highest expenses in damages which some students feel is due to the fraternity parties held there. Because of this perception, only one party is allowed among the three fraternities residing in Frazer per night.

Mr. Rick Hurley, Vice President of Business Affairs, believes damages are down due to better education programs, the improved appearance of many of the dorms, and simply because more students are aware of the financial impact of the damages.

Mr. Dave Rettig, Director of Housing, shares these feelings and believes that the better students feel about their living residences, the nicer the residences will remain.

Rettig meets with the Physical Plant and RECs each month to evaluate damage. This information is then passed on to RAs who pass it on to their residents, thereby making sure everyone is informed.

One other way some students are being informed and involved is through the group "Frazer Watch." This is a group of students who live in the building and walk the hallways and stairways. Because of its success Curry is getting involved by starting its own similar watch group.

Greek chapter room changes made

By Tanya Vernaza
Rotunda Staff

According to David Rettig, Director of Housing, the Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity has been granted their request to transfer from their chapter room in Frazer to the old Delta Sigma Phi chapter room in Cox.

Some students find this news disturbing since Cox has not been having problems with noise and they fear that this may change.

But Rettig believes these fears are unfounded. He says "the Alpha Sigs have not been a problem group in the past. I don't see the need for major concern."

The Alpha Sigma Phi Fraternity will move into their new chapter room before next fall.

Rettig says that the decision was made primarily to give the fraternity a larger chapter room.

Tim Pierson, Dean of Students, says that the old Alpha Sigma Phi chapter room will be shared by two organizations. The business fraternity, Delta Sigma Pi will occupy one-half of the old chapter room and the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity will take over the other half.

Another change which will be taking place is that Phi Beta Sigma will be moving from Curry to Cox into the old Alpha Phi Alpha chapter room.

The most recent addition to Longwood's Greek system, the Phi Kappa Tau Fraternity, will be moving into Curry.

Tim Pierson says that they took into consideration the needs and the size of the organizations, and as a result the space was distributed as fairly as possible.

Pierson also commented on the fact that once Hiner is remodeled, Delta Sigma Pi will be offered a meeting room in the building.

Trainers unpaid for services

By Carol Semones
Rotunda Staff

To train by definition is to coach in or accustom to a mode of behavior or custom. The athletic trainers of Longwood sports do much more than this basic definition.

Athletic trainers such as sophomore Jenny Lanham, the trainer for the baseball team in spring and the wrestling team in winter, must be at all practices and games with the only exception being "overnighters"—games played at other colleges or universities.

Trainers also attempt to prevent injuries by assisting players in stretching and taping weak ankles, wrists, and elbows for extra support.

According to Lanham, a trainer attempts to get to know the physical weaknesses of the athletes and can often understand and predict injuries more efficiently.

The athletic department requires trainers to take first-aid and CPR classes. They arrive on the field with a training kit including first aid supplies and the skills of CPR intact in the case of an emergency.

According to Brendan McEvoy, a freshman and Sports Editor of the Rotunda, trainers at Lynchburg College get paid for anything above and beyond te mandetory 100 volunteer hours required in association with their practicum.

Trainers at Longwood, however, do not get paid, nor do they receive academic credit for the hours spent on the field and in the training room.

Along with their duties during practices and games, trainers are required to be in the training room 1 hour before and 1 hour after each practice and game.

Lisa Johnson, a graduate student from the University of Virginia and the assistant athletic trainer, said "trainers put in a lot more time than managers and athletes."

When asked to prioritize training, Jenny Lanham commented "first comes academics and them comes my team. Last spring semester, I put in 100 + hours with the baseball team alone. I love my team and want to be there for them."

Lanham goes on to say "I love working with the athletes and with the sports themselves. I know we are appreciated and recognized but it would be nice to get something for our effort and time spent."

Unlike managers, whose text books are given to them and athletes who get 1 academic credit, trainers depend only on personal dedication and motivation to get their jobs done.

Emily Hersch, head of the athletic training department, said, "We [the athletic department] absolutely couldn't do without them. They are such a credit to the athletic program at Longwood. They do an excellent job and probably don't receive enough credit. They work long, unusual, and stressful hours. I'm not sure that we say thanks enough but I'd like to say it now. We appreciate the snap judgments they have to make and their accuracy in emergency situations."

PERSPECTIVES

Administrator's professionalism questioned

Remember freedom of the press? Ever heard of free access to public information? Familiar with the United States Constitution? Well, somebody in the Greek Affairs office apparently didn't do to well in his high school civics class.

In recent months there has been a furor over some of the editorial stances taken by the Rotunda. That's fine. In fact, that is one of the primary purposes of a newspaper: to promote discussion and debate.

Individuals are welcome to hold an opinion differing from those expressed by the Rotunda. However, when these personal opinions begin affecting college policy and the welfare of the entire student body, it is another matter entirely. This has become the case with the decision of one college administrator to no longer have any dealings with the Rotunda on any level.

Mr. Steve Dealph, Greek Affairs Coordinator, has, in our opinion, chosen to encourage disunity between greeks and non-greeks by blatantly refusing to speak to this publication's representatives on greek activities and events.

According to the reporter who covered greek issues, Mr. Dealph says that if there is any information that he wishes to disseminate, he will do so through his own publication, which is called the "Greek Columns."

We do not question the appropriateness or need for a newsletter geared towards greek interests solely. Such a publication can serve an important purpose on this campus.

However, frankly, we are, shocked that any Longwood College official would refuse to speak to a student about a school-related matter of a non-personal nature, especially when they are acting as representatives of the student press.

As we understand it, and granted based on the activities of Mr. Dealph, it has been hard to tell exactly what he is supposed to do, part of the Greek Affairs Coordinator's is to serve as a liaison between the greek community and the all non-greek individuals on campus.

But regardless of his job description, he is a state employee whose sole purpose is to serve the student body, not just members of fraternities and sororities — from whom we expect a flood of letters in support of Mr. Dealph.

Mr. Dealph even seems unable to present the facade of being willing, but unfortunately without the time at that moment, to talk to the press that so many campus administrators employ. (Don't get us wrong. Not every campus administrator is overtly or tacitly unwilling to speak to the press. Dean of Students Tim Pierson, for example, is always forthcoming and pleasant to deal with, and we appreciate it).

Overall, the Rotunda finds Mr. Dealph's actions and attitudes both disturbing and unprofessional. Perhaps it is time for Mr. Dealph to put aside his own petty antagonisms and personal feelings and attempt to adequately fulfill the job he is supposed to be doing.

All opinions expressed in unsigned editorials presents the majority opinion of the editorial board.

ELLEN GOODMAN

There were more than a few inauspicious moments in the designated year-of-the-woman Oscars. The opening tribute to Hollywood's women began, after all, with a chorus of "Some Day My Prince Will Come."

Billy Crystal then remarked on a dismal lack of decent women's roles, adding his equally dismal assessment. "Some of the most-talked-about women's parts, are Sharon Stone's in 'Basic Instinct.'"

The Academy itself gave the award for Best Actress to Emma Thompson for her portrait of a strong woman of her time. Her time was 1910.

And nobody even remarked on the fact that the best female role of the year had gone to Jaye Davidson of "The Crying Game."

No, this was most certainly not the year of the woman in Hollywood. It was, however, the year of the "new man." The year of the men under the influence of women. Or maybe the year of the woman—the woman's movement, the woman's message—behind the man.

By now, the movie that walked away with the big Oscar, "Unforgiven," has been called a revisionist Western so often that the words should appear on the screen as a subtitle. But all four movies that garnered the most attention—"The Unforgiven," "The Crying Game," "A Few Good Men" and "Scent of a Woman"—are equally revisionist.

They feature an anti-gunslinger who takes up bounty hunting to support his kids. An Irish no-longer-terrorist struggling with tenderness. A lone Rambo of a military man taken down for his outlaw code. A blind, self-hating veteran hell-bent on self-destruction.

In one way or another, they tell stories about men mustering out of violence. In short, they tell stories about manhood in the '90s, an era of military conversion that's not only economic but psychological.

Of all of these, "Unforgiven" is the most obvious. It's as if the movie itself were a mea culpa, as if Eastwood were asking for forgiveness in "Unforgiven," for Hollywood's glorification of violence.

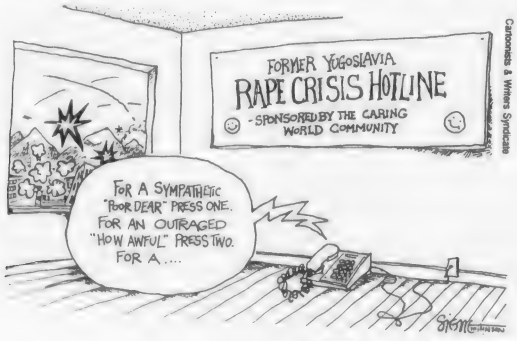
The script was first written in 1975, long before Eastwood began making Ronald Reagan's day. But he only decided to make the film last year, after and because of the Los Angeles riots. Indeed, talking backstage Monday night, he sounded rather like a new man at 62: "The story preaches that it isn't glamorous to take a gun, it isn't glamorous to kill people. It isn't pretty."

"Scent of a Woman" is more subtle but it's no less a tribute to the times. The outline reads like a chapter of John Bly. It's about old men and new, hard men and soft. It's about "fathers" and "son," needing each other.

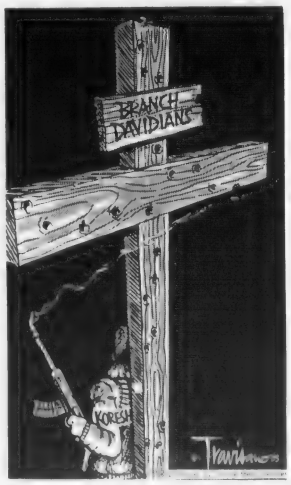
The older man's strength and the younger man's sensitivity eventually combine to make whole. They save each other from the crippling effects of their institutions—the rigid regulations of military and prep school.

The messages in these post-Ollie North, post-Cold War movies are closely identified with the messages that women have been conveying for a generation. They say that superheroes are fine ... in outer space. That justice isn't something to be decided by a Terminator. That there's more than us and them, winners and losers. That life on Earth is complicated, often painful and, in the end, relationship may matter the most.

In each one of these Oscar winners men turn their backs on significant pieces of male history. At times, watching them is like looking in the recent election year mirror and seeing a young man win against an elder stuck in that history. The president and cinematic winners alike ran on a domestic—truly domestic—agenda.



The odd thing is that women's messages are heard more than women are seen on the screen. The issues raised by women in our culture are now the stuff of buddy movies. Indeed, as Ethel Klein, who has tracked both politics and the Oscars for her polling firm, says with some irony, "Bill Clinton won on a women's agenda and these men are winning Oscars on our agenda."



Make no mistake. I am delighted by these cinematic messages and new images. But I cannot help wondering why these questions of life are most important, given star billing, when they happen to men?

In "A Few Good Men," a younger generations reforms the military ... a man's job. In "The Crying Game," a terrorist learns the power of commitment ... from other men.

Where in the darkened theater are the complex, meaty roles for women who are changing our beliefs, our institutions, our country? Still waiting for someday, for their Prince to come?

Spring break: One man's chronicle

By David Adcock
Rotunda Staff

My mind began to wander as I stood in my basement, knee deep in murky, frigid water. This was my last morning in Farmville before Spring Break.

The itinerary was loosely set for our sailing trip in Florida. Dave and I drove to Virginia Beach to meet the other guys who were packed and ready to go. We embarked from a cloudy, but pleasant Virginia Beach.

The first driving shift was accomplished by Ross. (One shift equals one tank of gas) The Suburban provided excellent comfort, both for sleeping and driving. Three driving shifts down the road we entered West Palm Beach. Ross' dad, Mr. Johnson, was waiting for us on his boat in Palm Beach. The thirteen hour trip had not been able to remove the excitement out of any of us.

We pulled in to the Marina, white as sheets and ready to embark. The first night was spent buying supplies, and of course we drank a few cold beverages.

The next bright and sunny morning we left on Mr. Johnson's Hunter 54 sailboat. The Captain, Mr. Johnson, was a Salty Sailor (Salty with experience). With beer in hand, he had embarked on many sailing ventures, and he was to teach us some very interesting things about sailing, as weel as about life.

Motoring through the harbor, we were in awe at the size and glamour of the other yachts moving around and past us. With beers in hand, we smiled and waved. Being rich is great, but we had our own richness: happiness.

As we leisurely slid trough the inlet, the Captain noticed that the engine was overheating, and it would surely be a problem if we continued the trip. We spent the rest of the day in the harbor anchored off of a small mass of land called Peanut Island. Sunning and drinking, we relaxed.

Somewhat moped, yet in the planning stage again, we slowly made our way back to the dock that moonlit night at the onset of high tide.

We were all worn from the sun and sodas, but the decision was made. After being informed by the Captain that the boat would be ready on Tuesday, we crashed early and at 7 am sharp we clambered back into the Suburban for a five hour trip to visit our fraternity brothers and other friends in Key West.

Seth drove the trip, and we were literally blazing down the road to our destination. We arrived in Key West at 10 o'clock to the worn faces of our obviously surprised brothers.

As all of the fellas awoke, the partying began. Dave and Ross were well on their way, each being at least a six pack under from the trip. We carted in five cases of beer from the truck and proceeded to get rowdy.

Apparently, howling profanities at the top of one's lungs was not a tradition on Catherine street as we had hoped. The rowdy scene around the pool area was too much for the locals to handle, but we did not care. We grabbed our beer and proceeded to the beach.

By two o'clock the buzz had made sunglasses a necessity. The lazy, drunken eyes we had were not likely to attract many of the bathing beauties that covered the beach like a multi-colored blanket. While pounding beers and regarding girls on a tropical beach with the sun blazing on me, I was not sure at that point that the situation could improve.

Key West seemed determined not to let us down. We left the beach in a slow weaving procession, the liquid diet wearing heavily on our motor skills. Food was in order. I just could not remember eating a better submarine sandwich in my life. After we ate, the second wind set in us all, and we were prepared for the inevitable: All You can Drink.

It started at seven thirty, and by the end I could not see the clock, and it did not make any difference. Weaving around the bar, I ran into people I knew and many that I did not. Overall, It was like no other bar that I had ever experienced.

Many of my brothers reached new levels of intoxication including myself. One brother, Eric, was kicked out of a bar merely for being stewed. How can they expect him not to be drunk after force feeding him liquor and beer for two hours? In fact, I was also kicked out for feeling no pain so to speak.

Stumbling around the street I had an impaired perception of Key West. For hours it seemed, I wandered the streets, somehow traveling in a circle. I noticed many different types of people on the streets. Finally, I made my way back to the bars. I looked on the balcony of a few popular bars and chuckled at the slovenly and blitzed college students chugging and slugging. This place was too good to be true.

In my slumber I missed the main attraction that night. It was the wet t-shirt contest. Volunteers, usually girls who were three sheets to the wind, slithered up on to the bar to show their wares. Bartenders rubbed and fondled them as men turned to animals howled and cheered them on. Only in Key West.

The next day, Monday, began with a shower in the pool amongst the beer cans and other debris.

Scenes of the night before were told and re-told, with extra attention given to the not-too-surprising front porch frolic from the night before. A good laugh was had and at that moment I realized that life would never be as full and rich.

Another day of fun, sun and sodas led me to one place; the liquor store.

Ten dollars for the most jarring tequila I have ever drank. Not cheap in price, but not exactly smooth either. Sean took the first shot and then proceeded to christen the side yard with a layer of yak, taking five full heaves to clear out his system.

This pre-partying set the tone for the rest of the night, and as one can imagine it was similar to the tequila, not too smooth at all.

The night begun and ended in a bar called Rum-Runners. We swilled from 9:30 to 11:30, double-fisted with harsh drinks for most of the time.

Some how the fella's ended up watching the wet T-shirt contest, and the girls had a few more tricks up their shorts. However, I am sure that It was not as exiting as the late night scene at the little shack on Catherine street.

While most of the fella's and their respective women slept, a strange thing occurred. Apparently some couple found themselves in a compromising position on the bathroom sink. Having your leverage fall out from under you when you need it the most is bad luck indeed!

By the end of our lanky trip to West Palm we were ready to get in the boat and get in the water. We loaded up our supplies as Captain Johnson informed us we would be leaving at sunrise and heading to Ft. Lauderdale.

The day was long and enjoyable and the sun fried our skin. We rolled into a bustling inlet at Ft. Lauderdale with Budweisers in hand and permanent smiles on our faces. The day had not been jam-packed with action and adventure, saturated with life.

The next morning, we headed out of the harbor to sail back to West Palm Beach. The theme of the day was Budweiser, again. Fortunately, the wind picked up and the Captain put us in to the best position to utilize the Gulf Stream current. We made it back to Peanut Island a few hours before sundown.

Fishing was the topic of the next day. I stood on the bow and dove of the boat at sunrise in order to wake up my senses. I was not alone. A friendly group of barracuda were enjoying the shade under the boat. Once I saw my friends in the water, I decided that it was time for me to exit.

My stomach and equilibrium took the hit as I felt seasick while rocking back and forth.

The Captain suggested that I drink beer. I did so, and a thirty - two ounce Mickey's chased all of the butterflies away.

We got really saucy on the boat that day, however, we did not catch any fish, not even a bite. It did not matter, we just enjoyed our last day in the sun.

The rain coming down in sheets during most of the ride the eighteen hour trip was grueling. However, we were home safe and sound and the trip had been unforgettable. We relaxed at home that night, remembering and laughing, drinking the beer were had left from the trip.

Back at Longwood we got a reality shock. Florida had been wonderful, but life won't let you get to far ahead. I raised the shovel above my head and it came down with a thunderous sound, cracking the ice at my feet. Only in Farmville.

'Tour De Cure' serves purpose

By Heather Lustig
Rotunda Staff

The American Diabetes Association will be hosting the "Tour De Cure" bike ride in Appomatox on May 1, 1993. The purpose of the ride will be to raise funds for diabetes research.

According to Amy Shelor, an employee of the A.D.A., three different bike rides will be held, the 100K, 50K, and the 25K. Early registration (before April 16) will be $15.00, after April 17, the fee will be $20.00.

Bike riders must have at least $50.00 in pledges, in addition, they must wear bike helmets and obey all safety and traffic laws.

Prizes will be awarded, ranging from T-shirts to gift certificates. Pizza Hut will supply spaghetti for lunches.

"Diabetes means disease, disability, and potentially death for thousands of people in Virginia," said Mike Arnold (chairmen of the Tour De Cure) in a statement about the bike ride. "The money raised through Tour De Cure will go toward research to find a cure and to improve the lives of all people affected by diabetes in Virginia."

Shelor explained that 300,000 Virginians have diabetes, of these half don't know they have the disease. Diabetes affects the body and how its usage of food.

The most significant factor of diabetes is the lack of insulin, a product made in the pancreas. Diabetics' pancreases does not make sufficient, or, if any insulin.

There exist two forms of diabetes—insulin and non-insulin. Insulin diabetes is found mostly in children and young adults. To control the disease, they must regularly inject themselves with insulin.

Non-insulin occurs generally in adults. Their pancreas produces barely enough insulin to be effective, however because the insulin levels are low, these people are diagnosed as having diabetes.

According to Shelor, symptoms of diabetes (with insulin patients) include: "frequent urination, excessive thirst, extreme hunger, drastic weight loss, weakness and exhaustion, and nausea."

For non-insulin patients, many of the symptoms are similar to insulin patients, however, with additional symptoms. These include: skin that doesn't heal quickly, "drowsiness, blurred vision, tingling or numbness in the hands and feet, and itching."

According to Shelor, registration forms are availablefor the Tour de Cure by sending for information at American Diabetes Association/Central Virginia Chapter/3635 Manassas Dr./Suite E. Roanoke, VA 24018. She also warned that if anyone can answer yes to any of the above symptoms, please, get tested immediately.

Order of Omega meets challenge

By Susan Mazza
Rotunda Staff

One of the hot topics on campus lately is campus beautification. Dr. Stuart challenged Order of Omega, the social Greek honorary leadership society, to plant trees to help in this process.

Order of Omega accepted the challenge and in turn challenged each fraternity and sorority on campus to pledge twenty dollars to go toward the planting of these trees.

The Order of Omega, along with other Greek women and men, are planning on planting two trees between Stubbs and Cox this Spring.

Under the trees there will be a plaque commemorating those that contributed to the purchasing of the trees.

Amy Kappel, a member of Order of Omega as well as Delta Zeta, is excited about this project. She sees it as a great chance for the Greeks to "work together for the betterment of Longwood." She expressed how she felt that this kind of Greek unity project is what being Greek is all about.

Longwood's Theta Chi chapter of Order of Omega is looking forward to making this tree planting challenge an annual service project.

Financial aid criteria changes

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP) Tufts University sent out acceptance letters last week to prospective students – the ones who could afford to pay tuition, room and board, or qualified for scarce financial aid.

Like many colleges and universities that once admitted students only on the basis of their academic background, Tufts is now considering its applicants' ability to pay.

"These would be people we were planning to admit, but it became apparent that, for a small number of these students, it would be an empty gesture," said David Cuttinow, director of admissions.

One after another, private universities are dropping from the ranks of schools that can afford to overlook financial need when making admissions decisions. What this means, say educators, is an end to the long-held American conviction that students who are smart enough and work hard can go to any college they desire.

"A number of schools have been doing their best to meet the need of all students regardless of their circumstances, but this has been a dwindling number of schools," said Richard Rosser, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

Long proud of their need-blind admissions policies, even elite and Ivy League schools may soon close the door on qualified applicants who can't afford to pay.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which lost an antitrust case last year over its practice of sharing financial aid information with competing schools, argued it was only this cooperation that allowed the group to accept all qualified candidates without regard to income.

"The only way we can maintain need-blind admission is if there is not a wide-open bidding war," said MIT spokesman Ken Campbell.

The same argument will be part of the university's appeal of the ruling, scheduled to be heard in Philadelphia in May.

One Ivy League school, Brown University, admits needy applicants on a first-come, first-served basis. The policy has been the subject of protests from students, who complain it has a disproportionate effect on qualified minorities. The university says its relatively small endowment limits the amount of aid it has available.

Other schools that claim to have need-blind admission nonetheless deny financial aid to some of the students they've accepted, effectively preventing them from coming.

Cornell University last week canceled a plan to ration financial aid for next year's freshmen because the need was not as great as first predicted. But administrators said economics continue to threaten Cornell's long-standing policy of filling the financial gap for qualified students who could not afford to go there, even with state and federal help. Four percent of admitted students are on a waiting list for scholarships.

Tufts ran out of financial aid last year, and 30 students were denied admission because there wasn't any money left.

"Students should be admitted to the best college in which they can compete, predicated only on their academic ability, not their economic status. That's always been the tradition in this country," said John DiBiaggio, president at Tufts, where undergraduate tuition, room and board will cost $24,962 next year. "But that certainly is going to be endangered at many institutions."

DiBiaggio said he worries some potential applicants don't even bother to apply to private universities, assuming that they can't afford tuition.

A survey of 3,500 high school seniors last month by the National Association of College Admissions Counselors found 29 percent hoped to go to a four-year, liberal arts college or university, but only 17 percent thought they would. The major reason: cost, which has eclipsed location, academic reputation and social life as the Number 1 reason for choosing a college.

With the price of four years at a prestigious private college now exceeding $100,000, it is not only poor students who are being frozen out.

"It could be a Republican in Washington who left with the Bush people, it could be a pilot at Delta who was laid off," said Frank Burtnett, director of the National Association of College Admission Counselors. "These are people who didn't think they would have to worry about tuition."

Two-thirds of students at independent colleges and universities depend on some form of financial aid.

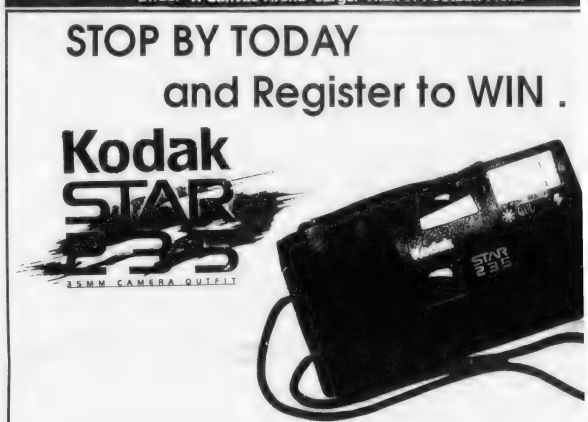
"There are no longer many families that could afford a private college education without assistance," Cuttinow said.

But the ax is also falling on the poorest students and minorities.

"The system of factoring need into admission has the potential to be very biased against certain populations, and that means students of low economic capability," Burtnett said. "That often means students of color."

Some schools are redoubling their efforts.

Grinnell College in Iowa said this year it would continue a policy of need-blind admissions, but only after making other budget cuts. The school has one of the nation's largest endowments for its size.



"We have always felt that one of our missions was to make sure any academically talented student could come to Grinnell," said treasurer David Clay. "That diversity is really important to the educational process, whether it's cultural ethnic or economic."

"Clearly, we're fortunate to be able to continue to do this," he said. "Others are going to have a much more difficult time."

Longwood ranked 20th in Division II

Lancer baseball extends win streak to seven

Longwood's baseball team, which extended its win streak to seven games last week, moved up four notches in the Collegiate Baseball Division II poll this week, jumping from 24th to 20th.

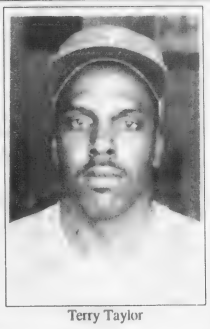
Now 15-4-1, the Lancers have five games scheduled Thursday through Saturday at home. St. Paul's is slated to visit for a single game Thursday at 3:00 and Division II Gannon comes to town for doubleheader both Friday and Saturday starting at 1:00.

Sunday at Lancer Field, Longwood beat visiting North Carolina A&T 11-10 in extra innings and 4-3 in the nightcap. Lancer Senior third baseman Terry Taylor totaled five runs and six stolen bases and scored the winning run in the opener. Shawn Jones drove in four runs and belted his fifth homer for the Lancers. Also, Chris Tyson went 3-5 with two doubles and Mike Madden was 2-3.

Senior Kyle Weaver moved his pitching record to 6-1 with two innings of shutout relief. The Division I Aggies scored five unearned runs in the top of the seventh to force extra innings. In the bottom of the ninth Taylor was hit by a pitch, stole second and third, and scored on an error for the margin of victory.

In the second game Longwood pitcher Wyatt Flippen, 2-3, tossed a five-hitter and struck out seven. Brian Bassett , who went 3-3, scored the winning run on a sacrifice fly by Taylor in the fifth. Lancers Todd Bowman and Chris Hatcher had two hits each in the second game.

Longwood baseball coach Buddy Bolding notched his 400th career victory Thursday afternoon as the Lancers belted St. Paul's 15-4 in Farmville. Bolding's record is now 402-159-3.



Bassett and Taylor hit two-run homers and drove in seven runs between them in Longwood's win over St. Paul's. The game was stopped after seven innings on the 10-run rule. Senior pitcher Brent Willard, 2-0, struck out nine in seven innings.

Longwood's leading hitters are: Todd Bowman (.379, 4 doubles, 3 homers, 15 RBI), Chris Tyson (.375, 6 doubles, 10 RBI), Jeff Toms (.373, 22 runs, 10 RBI, 8-8 stolen bases), Terry Taylor (.362, 27 RBI, 6 doubles, 11-11 stolen bases), Brian Bassett (.343, 13 RBI, 3 doubles, 3 triples), Shawn Jones (.339, 18 RBI, 5 homers), Matt Martinez (.300, 6 RBI), and Chris Hatcher (.333, 3 doubles).

Leading the Lancers pitching staff are Kyle Weaver (6-1, 46 strikeouts, 1.74 e.r.a. 6 straight wins and five complete games), freshman Jason Gross (3-0, 3.25), Brent Willard (2-0, 3.46) and freshman Greg Goodlin (1-0, 2.90).

Seniors named co-players of the week

Handley, Taylor share weekly honor

Longwood senior lacrosse player Denise Hanley and senior baseball player Terry Taylor, who led their respective teams to unbeaten weeks, have been named co-Longwood College Players of the Week for the period March 28 through April 4. Player of the week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

Hanley, who plays center, scored 11 goals last week, leading the Longwood lacrosse team to a 3-0 week. She now has 12 goals for the season, in comparison with two she scored all last year. Helped by Hanley, the Lady Lancers are 6-0.

"Denise had a very strong week," said coach Sandy Bridgeman. "She took the ball to the goal more than usual and it paid off. With her great lacrosse skills, she's important to us both offensively and defensively."

Also a key player on last year's lacrosse team, Hanley was a three-year starter in field hockey for the Lady Lancers. She helped the squad to a 10-5-1 mark in the fall.

A four-year starter at third base, Taylor helped Lancer baseball move its record to 15-4-1 last week. In Sunday's 11-10, 4-3 sweep of North Carolina A&T, Taylor had a phenomenal performance in the first game. He went 2-2 with a triple, stole six bases and scored five runs. In addition, he reached base all six times he came to the plate, drawing three walks and getting hit by a pitch once.

In the ninth inning with the game tied 10-10, Taylor was hit by a pitch, stole second and third and came home when the Aggie catcher over-threw the ball at second base. In the second game, it was Taylor sacrifice fly which brought home the winning run.

Thursday in a 15-4 rout of St. Paul's, Taylor drove in four runs with a homer and a two-run single. The Lancer clean-up batter and RBI leader, Taylor ranks sixth on Longwood's all-time home run list with 22. Hitting .362 with 6 doubles, 2 triples and 2 homers, he's driven in 27 runs in 20 games.

School record & game win streak snapped

Softball loses pair at Va. Wesleyan

Longwood's softball team traveled to Norfolk last Wednesday for a doubleheader with Virginia Wesleyan and lost two close games to drop its record to 10-7 this spring. Losing 3-2 and 6-5, the Lady Lancers also had their school record eight-game winning streak snapped.

In the opener, Longwood led 2-1 through 4 1/2 innings before the hosts rallied for two runs in the bottom of the fifth to take the win. Senior Jen Brady and classmate Robin Jensen paced LC going 2-2 and 2-3 with one run respectively. Junior Ana Litton went 2-4 with a double and a run scored. Freshman Emily Welpott took the loss on the mound pitching six innings allowing seven hits with four strikeouts.

In the nightcap, VWC jumped ahead 3-0 early and held on for the 6-5 triumph and sweep of the doubleheader. Sophomore Mari Willen was 3-3 with a triple and a double while Brady went 2-3. Scoring runs for LC were Willen with two, Jensen, sophomore Lorri Payne and freshman Kerri Johnson. Junior Andi Wrenn suffered the pitching loss, allowing just five hits but walking seven in six innings on the mound. The Lady Lancers also committed six errors in the second contest.

Through 17 games, Willen continues to lead the Lady Lancers in hitting with an outstanding .433 average (26-60). Willen has a team-leading six doubles and 15 RBI along with 17 runs scored. Johnson is hitting .375 (21-56) with 10 RBI while Jensen is at .340 (18-53). Litton is hitting .339 (20-59) with four triples, four doubles and 13 RBI. Payne is hitting .305 (18-59) with 17 runs scored.

Wrenn is now 5-3 on the mound allowing 52 hits in 54 innings pitched. Wrenn's ERA is an outstanding 1.81. Welpott's record stands at 4-4 as she's pitched 52 innings giving up 66 hits. Welpott has an ERA of 2.96 with 24 strikeouts and just 16 walks.

Longwood's scheduled doubleheader with Radford last Thursday was postponed for the third time due to the weather. The Lady Lancers hosted C. W. Post (N.Y.) College in a doubleheader Tuesday and were scheduled to host Elon (N.C.) College Thursday for a doubleheader beginning at 2 p.m. at Farmville's Armory Field.

LC ranked second in Lacrosse poll

Longwood's lacrosse team, ranked second in this week's Division II Brine/Intercollegiate Women's Lacrosse Coaches' Association poll, ended the first week of April with an unblemished record of 6-0 by easily defeating visiting Greensboro (NC) College last Thursday and then traveling south for a victory over Guilford (NC) College on Saturday.

Against Greensboro, the Lady Lancers recorded their first shutout of the season with a 13-0 rout. Leading the scoring for LC was junior Nora Lamb with four goals, and senior Denise Hanley and freshman Natalie Buritsch with three each. Rounding out the scoring for the Lady Lancers were seniors Trish McCormick and Tonia Harris along with sophomore Sara Hogan all with one goal apiece.

"Anytime we have a shutout, it says something for our defensive team," commented coach Sandy Bridgeman. "Nora had a good game for us, connecting on all four of her shots, and Natalie is doing well in the scoring department for us as well."

Longwood dominated the field against Old Dominion Athletic Conference member Guilford in North Carolina on Saturday. The Lady Lancers established a season-high scoring tally by handing their hosts a 16-6 loss.

"It was a good game for us on both ends of the field," commented Bridgeman. "Our attack made better cuts and easily beat their defenders one-on-one to the goal in the first half and when Guilford changed its man-on-man defense to a zone in the second half, we adjusted well and were still able to put the ball in."

"Denise, Natalie, and Anita Warford all had a good game by creating open shots and then making them count."

Longwood was led in scoring by Hanley and Buritsch, each with five goals. Warford scored four goals, while Harris and McCormick added one apiece. Additionally, Warford contributed an assist.

Defensively, the Lady Lancers were solid as well allowing the home team only three goals per half.

"Our defense played very strong by denying Guilford in the midfield," said Bridgeman. "They weren't able to get the ball downfield, which hurt their attack because their main scoring threat was coming around the crease."

Controlling the ground ball department was a key issue in the game. Leading this category was senior co-captain Susie Lindsay with nine balls, closely followed by Hanley with eight and Lamb, Buritsch, and junior DeDe Deane all with seven controls.

Longwood will host Mary Baldwin Wednesday at 4:30 on Farmville's First Avenue Field before traveling to Lynchburg College Saturday to face Wittenberg (Ohio) College at 11 a.m.

In-state costs soar 7.51% by order of Board of Visitors

By Brad Owen
Senior Editor

Longwood total costs for undergraduates will rise 7.51 percent for state residents and 11.19 percent for non-residents in 1993-94. Tuition alone will go up 17.5 percent for all residents next year. The increases were approved last week by a majority vote of the Board of Visitors.

Finance Committee chair Franklin M. Slayton urged the Board to override the administration's recommended increase of 6.7 percent because, "I genuinely believe that the academic needs are there and that the College will spend the additional funds wisely." Slayton went on to state that he felt that some of the additional funds could be used to "stop nickel and dime-ing students" through cutting some fees (ex. diploma fee).

The 7.51 percent increase approved by the Board will produce an additional $194,000.

President William F. Dorrill stated that the administration's proposal reflected a thorough exploration of College needs balanced against concerns for student costs, the intent to maintain access, and the possible adverse effect of higher tuition and fees on future enrollment. "The question is balance and what is right and just in this time of difficulty," he stated. Dorrill also reminded Board members several times that bad publicity generated by the raise in costs might negatively affect freshmen deposits for the fall.

Student Government President Darrell Wells objected to any increase over that recommended by the administration. After the Boards decision, Wells said, "They still did not give any firm reason for wanting the extra money. Oh great! We're going to have $194,000 and we don't know how we're going to spend it. I'm sorry, but if I said, 'Hey, I want $200,000 and I don't know how I'm going to spend it', are they going to give it to me? I don't think so! They gave no justification for this increase, why? Everyone else has to justify their requests. Why can't the Board?"

President Dorrill noted that State support for the cost of education has declined from 71.4 percent in 1990-91 to 47 percent in 1993-94 and that "increased revenue was necessary to maintain and enhance quality, programs, and services."

Tuition, fees, room and board for in-state students will rise to $7,948 a year. Total costs in 1992-93 were $7,394. The figures are based on the 19-meals-a-week plan for the academic year.

Out-of-state students will pay$13,032, up from $11,720 in 1992-93.

Costs for undergraduate commuter students will be $4,106 for Virginians and $9,090 for out-of-state students. In-state commuting graduate students will pay $4,456. The cost for part-time Virginia graduate students will increase from $96 per credit hour to $120.

Longwood student assaulted in Curry; Male student dismissed

By Doug Dimarino
Rotunda Staff

Just seventeen days into 1993, the Longwood campus was stricken with its first sexual assault case of the year, leaving one woman emotionally torn and one male student dismissed from the school.

On January 17, 1993 the victim (whose name has been withheld) was returning to her dorm room at approximately 2:15 a.m. As she entered Curry lobby, four males began to whistle and speak obscenities to the woman.

When the woman approached the security door, the four males proceeded to surround the woman and continued with their obscene language, while running their hands over the victim's body.

While three of the males continued to harass the woman verbally and physically, one of the males began masturbating, forcing the woman to watch.

A phone call was received at the Campus Police Office by reporting Officer Buddy Campbell at 3:20 a.m., and the incident went under investigation by Officers Roger Sudsbury and Sandy Finch.

Enough evidence was found in this case to prosecute one Longwood student, Thomas Lewis, who was dismissed from the college.

Recently, the case was also taken to criminal court, where Lewis was found guilty of sexual battery and indecent exposure.

Although Lewis pled innocent to both charges and denied that the situation ever occurred, he was found guilty on both counts, which resulted in a six month jail sentence for each offense.Lewis continued to argue that was not responsible for what took place on January 17 and has appealed his case to the Circuit Court.

The Campus Police Chief James Huskey commented that he hates it when criminal acts of this nature take place, and he wishes that there was more that he could do to protect each and every person on this campus.

Huskey said, "I don't like to think that we have students capable of committing these crimes. I take crimes against people more personal than crimes against property. Crimes against people are more significant because property can be replaced, but people cannot be. We must educate people to protect themselves from being victims."

Huskey also added that in this particular case, "I feel that this was a random act and there was no way the victim could have avoided the situation, but to avoid a planned attack people should be aware of their surroundings, think of what they will do if this occurs, and take the initiative to try and help their self."

Other security measures provided by campus police to insure safety for all students include self defense classes - by Sandy Finch, escort service, emergency phones, check on light outages, broken doors, and fire alarms, monitor sporting events, and provide crime prevention classes, taught by Sergeant Andy Rhodes.

Reynolds makes bid for Phi Beta Lambda national office

By Tanya Vernaza
Rotunda Staff

Longwood's business organization, Phi Beta Lambda, attended a state conference in Stanton, Virginia, on April 2nd and 3rd.

Eight of the 32 members of their local chapter went to compete. This organization is a collegiate level of FBLA (Future Business Leaders of America) .

At the tournament the Business decision making team which consisted of Brad Harrell, Connie Blevens, and Tim Burkett placed third. Will Byrd placed second in the Business communications event, Michael Belle placed first in the Business Principles category, and Joe Reynolds took first place in the Mr. Future Business Executive.

Allison Lillard, a member of Phi Beta Lambda's Longwood chapter will be holding a state office: she will be the new state treasurer.

Phi Beta Lambda is the only professional business organization in which individuals can compete on their own as well as one a team.

With 503 members in their state chapter, Longwood has managed to occupy various offices at the state level. Joe Reynolds was not only elected the local chapter president as a freshman , but he was also elected state president as well.

Reynolds also commented about his organization's involvement with community service projects, professional activities such as speakers, as well as their involvement in the AT&T Invitational Challenge (Stock Market Game).

Of his degree in Business, Reynolds says " I am going to try to make a change in the business world, there are a lot of problems out there and I want to be a part of the needed change"..

The executive committee for Phi Beta Lambda approved Reynold's request to run for national office.

He will be running for the office of Vice President of the Southern Region. Reynolds is currently a member of Delta Sigma Pi and holds the office of Chancellor.

Reynolds, William Byrd, and Michael Belle will be attending the National Tournament this year . It will be held on July 10 thru 13 in Washington, D.C.

Reynolds says, "the success of the local chapter and my term both as president of the local and state chapters, would not have been possible without the support of our advisor Mrs. Hamelett and the School of Business and Economics."

Stolen cars create concern on campus

By Doug Dimarino
Rotunda Staff

Campus police are warning students to lock their cars and be aware of the locations they use to park.

Recently, two students cars were stolen. Although, both incidents took place off campus, there have also been reports of break-ins on campus and many sightings of strangers roaming through the parking lots late at night.

The two cars that were stolen were parked on Buffalo Street and near the Methodist Church. Both cars were recovered.

Also, six cars have been broken into during the past month. These vehicles were parked on campus property between the dates of April 4 and April 7.

Three of these car break-ins occurred in the Venable Street parking lot, located next to French, and the other three occurred in the Wynne parking lot.

Drivers are encouraged to remove their valuables from their vehicles while parked, whether it be on or off campus.

Investigations have begun by Campus, Farmville, and Virginia State Police. The three forces are combining all of their efforts to find the culprits of these crimes.

"Our cars are extremely important to us for obvious reasons," said one commuter student whan asked about the thefts. "I understand that the campus police are doing a really good job with finding the thieves, and I hope thay catch them very soon. I don't know what I would do without my car."

Anyone with any information about any of these crimes should contact Officer John Thompson, of Longwood Campus Police, or Investigator Jack Bryant, of the Farmville Police Department.

Award-winning justice to speak

Lacy to be commencement speaker

Elizabeth B. Lacy, a justice of the Supreme Court of Virginia, will be the speaker for Longwood College's 1993 Commencement on Saturday, May 8.

The ceremonies are scheduled for 9:30 a.m. on Wheeler Mall and are open to the public.

There are 809 candidates for degrees this year, the largest number in Longwood's 154-year history. Included are 126 candidates for master's degrees and 683 candidates for bachelor's degrees. More than 200 of the 1993 graduates have qualified for initial teaching licenses.

Justice Lacy has served on the Supreme Court of Virginia since January of 1989. Appointed initially to fill an unexpired term, she was subsequently elected by the Virginia General Assembly to a 12-year term. She was the first woman justice on the state's highest court.

Prior to 1989, Justice Lacy had served four years on the Virginia State Corporation Commission. She was one of three judges on this independent commission, which has regulatory jurisdiction of state-chartered financial institutions, public utilities, railroads, motor carriers, insurance, securities, and corporations.

Her experience also includes service in the Office of the Attorney General of Virginia (1982-85) and Texas (1973-76). She was staff attorney to the Texas Legislative Council for three years.

Justice Lacy holds law degrees for the University of Virginia and the University of Texas. Her undergraduate degree in history is from Saint Mary's College in Indiana.

She serves on a variety of boards and committees, including the board of directors of the Virginia State Bar's Professionalism and Legal Education Committees, the Committee on Appellate Practice of the American Bar Association, and the Education Committee of the Virginia Judicial Conference.

Among numerous awards and honors, Justice Lacy has received a Distinguished Merit Citation from the National Conference of Christians and Jews, the Newsmaker of the Year award in 1990 from Virginia Press Women, the Woman Pathfinder Award from the Richmond Professional Women's Network, and the Liberty Bell Award from the Newport News Bar Association.

In 1992, she was named to the Virginia Women's Hall of Fame and received honorary doctorates from St. Mary's College and the T.C. Williams School of Law, University of Richmond.

Justice Lacy is married to D. Patrick Lacy, an attorney and a member of Longwood's Board of Visitors.

PERSPECTIVES

Graduates out — tuition hike in 809 Longwood students have reached a true milestone in their lives.

After four (or five, or six...) years of struggling, with only a few parties thrown in between study sessions for relaxation, they are on the brink of starting a completely new life, be it in the work-force, graduate school, or the military.

These students are armed with a degree from a truly exceptional college, academically speaking. Though there are some flaws with the institution, we believe no one can deny that, on the whole, we are fortunate to benefit from the expertise of an outstanding faculty.

And though the job scene is somewhat daunting, Longwood graduates can rest assured that they are well-equipped to seize their own futures. And, judging by the employment statistics, employers obviously agree.

Sadly, the students of today and tomorrow will have an even more struggles than the May graduates.

This is not in the academic arena. Instead it is the financial burdens faced by students that will be the greatest trial for many.

Our Board of Visitors, exceeding President Dorrill's recommendation for tuition increase and ignoring SGA President Darrell Wells' vehement anti-increase remarks, mandated a 7.51% total cost increase, with a 17.5% increase for tuition. 17.5%!!! Dorrill's recommendation was for a 6.7% increase, which he felt was sufficient to meet the needs of the college.

We question the Board of Visitors' ability to properly judge the situation. One would assume that when the President of the college and the President of the SGA (obviously two of the most well-informed individuals on campus and not natural allies when it comes to student costs) rail against such a large increase, there is some justification for their concern.

It is fruitless to hope that there is any hope for this increase not to be enacted. We can, however, hope that Longwood's President and SGA will continue to take such an active role in the future, potentially avoiding any future drastic increases.

King trial verdict is a miscarraige of justice

By James J. Sojka
News Editor

I am appalled at the verdict handed down in the Rodney King beating trial. This trial was to prove whether or not the four police officers violated Rodney King's civil rights. One of them was found guilty of excessive force and aiding and abetting, and another was found guilty of the latter charge. Didn't the first trial find them innocent? This verdict is the result of pressure and was used to calm the public. When the courts kowtow to the masses, justice is warped and useless.

What did the police officers do? They subdued an individual who was driving at speeds exceeding 100mph, was obviously in an altered state of mind, and lunged at them when they tried to arrest him (And yes, he did lunge. I saw the beginning of the videotape which the media so thoughtfully "forgot" to show. It showed King lunging at the officers and the police knocking him down. He got up again and again).

A simple question comes to mind: How did the other passengers in the vehicle get into the police car without being beaten? Perhaps the police didn't think that they were black, so therefore they wouldn't beat them. Or maybe they did not put up a fight. This last possibility seems more likely.

In L.A., the police must use their nightsticks to subdue a suspect; they are not allowed to physically restrain them with their bodies as other cities can do. If I were in that situation, I would have done the same thing as Officer Powell. I would make sure that the individual was not going to lunge at me any more; if that means I have to beat them, I will do so. It is not a matter of race; it is a matter of defending the public—that is their job, isn't it? I commend them on a job well done.

Rape victim praises Longwood Players' Fuente Ovejuna

Editor, Rotunda :

I would like to praise the Longwood Players for their recent production of Fuente Ovejuna. The message I perceived about women standing up for themselves is one which we rarely hear in out society, and one with which I fully agree. I am not saying women should go after rapists with pitchforks, but I do feel women should go after rapists with the legal system.

A couple of years ago I was a victim of rape on this campus, and I regret to say that I did not prosecute. This may seem hypocritical after my previous statements but at the time I had my reasons. I was a victim of date rape and because of the nature of the crime it took me a long time to realize I was a victim at all. I felt responsible for the crime because I had kissed the man who raped me voluntarily and because I had left a party with the man who raped me voluntarily. I was not drunk or provocatively dressed, nor did I behave in a manner that might have made the man who raped me believe that he had the right to ignore me when I said no. Even if I had been drunk, provocatively dressed, or a "tease," no means no and he should have respected that.

The reason why I tell this story is so that no one else will have to live it. I carried the guilt for my violation for over a year when he could have carried it. I carried the guilt because I was uneducated about date rape and what it was. When I realized that I had been raped there was nothing here to help me move beyond the pain.

Laurencia called upon the women of Fuente Ovejuna to right the wrongs done against them. Well no one can right the wrongs done against me so I call upon the faculty, staff, and administration of Longwood College to do something to prevent more women from being wronged. We need more education. We need to reach out to the students, women and men, on this campus and let them know what rape, and especially date rape, is and how they can prevent it. We need programs for students who have been victimized in this way to help them to live through it and go from being victims to being survivors. Why don't we have them now? How can we get them?

Date rape is a problem on this campus. I am not the only woman I know who has been a victim of it. So many victims have been forced to hide because they fear they will not be believed or because they do not understand what has happened to them. We should not be the ones to hide our faces in shame. We should be able to stand up straight and proud in a court of law and accuse the rapists, let them hide their faces. Some of the legislators in this country are trying to make it easier for women to do this. I think it is time the educators joined them.

Campus police commended for diligence

Editor, Rotunda :

I am writing to commend a very important department on this Longwood campus, the campus police. All too often it seems that the campus police are the brunt of all our jokes. However, last week the campus police assisted me through a very traumatic experience. On Wednesday, April 14 I went to move my car from behind Bedford. However, I discovered that it had been stolen, I immediately ran to campus police. They reacted very promptly and first calmed me down, then very professionally they made a report. The officer that worked with me was John Thompson; his professionalism and concern was very impressive. He seemed as unnerved as I was that something like this could happen here on campus. He was determined to recover my car and to apprehend the criminals. This helped me greatly knowing that they were concerned and were working very hard on this case. My car was later found off-campus and the engine was still warm, so this proved to me how diligently they had been working. There was only minor damage done to my car, but I believe that it is due to the campus police's efforts. My car was then dusted for fingerprints and the state police went over it. I feel much safer now that I have witnessed first-hand how the officers operate. I hope nothing ever happens like this again, but if it does, I believe the campus police will work together to resolve the problem.

So though we laugh at them on bicycles and argue about parking tickets, the campus police are a very special element of campus life. I think we all could do more to assist their efforts, so that these and other criminals will be apprehended. If you have any information about any of the cars vandalized, please notify the police at 2091.

In conclusion, I especially want to thank Officer John Thompson for his long hours and determination.

Adrienne Thornton

Correction

Last week's issue of the Rotunda contained an SGA election story which incorrectly stated that Brittany Heldrith had resigned as chair of the Elections Committee. Ms. Heldrith is still chair of that committee. She replaced Cameron Caffee in that post.

Pow Wow rich in Native American traditions

By Heather Lustig
Rotunda Staff

With this semester drawing to a close, few students stop and actually think of the next semester and the events which will be occurring then.

However, in September a very important will be happening on the Longwood campus. This is the Native American Pow Wow.

According to O. L. Durham, the head man dancer of the Native American Pow Wow, the Pow Wows were originally spiritual activities.

Caucasians, such as Custer, thought the Native American dances were an omen of death and destruction, especially the ghost dance.

Although the dancing might have changed because of this disapproval, the traditions of the Native Americans survived, in a large part because of the Native American Pow Wows.

And although the dancing might have been religious, now it has become a means of transferring the culture of the Indians from one generation to the next, and from one group of people to another.

Etiquette is a very important factor of the Pow Wow. As Durham explained, there are certain courtesies that must be observed.

For example, at one point during the weekend, the public will be allowed to walk among the various lodges set up on Iler field. Durham advised that if one of the lodge doors is not open, "then pass it by."

Another factor of etiquette is the taking of still photographs and video taping. Before taking a still photograph, ask first. There will be certain dances which should not be taped.

Some ceremonies, such as the pipe ceremonies can not be filmed.

The actual dancing will be held within a 100 foot circle. As according to tradition, the drums will be either positioned on the outskirts of the circle or in the center.

There will be one lead drum, one great drum, and then all the other various drummers. As Durham pointed out, "there can be many drummers."

The various dances will also be danced in a particular direction. "There is a reason for everything," Durham explained. If the dancing is Northern, then the dancing will be in counter-clockwise. Opposite for the Southern.

The grand entry for the Pow Wow, according to Durham, will be "when all are lined up. They will enter from one direction. They go around once, and then Head Man and Head Lady start all the dancers and pass all dancers before dancing starts."

The line up for the Grand Entry is as according to the type of dancing or rank in the tribe.

The first in the line-up are the Veterans, followed by the Chiefs/Elders. Then follows the Princesses and then the Head Man and Head Lady dancers.

The dancers who are lined up as according to the style of dancing they engage in.

First come the men dancers with the Old Style leading. Then the Straight dancers, then the Fancy dancers, the Grass dancers, and then the Traditional dancers. After them are the women dancers beginning with the Buckskin, then t he Fancy dancer, the Shaw, and then the Jingle Dress.

Similar to the dancing, the crafts presented will be Native American and "have a touch of the tradition," as Durham said.

"When people leave, " Durham explained, "they gain knowledge of some things. Some people are touched and can not shake the experience. Some people came with open hearts and with open minds, they leave with their prejudices and guilt behind. They watch the harmony, the watch the People, they listen to the drum. The drum is the heartbeat of the People."

Williams enriches Longwood Music Department

By Heather Lustig
Rotunda Staff

As the school year draws to a close and Longwood and the various awards are distributed, Longwood should recognize a teacher who has given many eye-opening dance performances, Rodney Williams. Williams is a dance instructor and the faculty advisor for the Longwood Dance Company.

In February, Williams directed and produced the civility program "With Open Hearts," an evening of dance and song with the emphasis of looking beyond the color of a person's skin and to look upon the hearts and souls of humanity.

In addition, Williams put together the first annual African-American Arts Explosion.

When asked where he received his inspiration to dance, he replied "my love for music, music is a big part of my life." He explained that at a young age he saw a performance by Ben Vereen and was held in awe. "I patterned my life after him," says Williams.

Another reason dance is so important to Williams is that it is a "combination of all the arts. I use dance to express and confront the issues of today. It is a multi-cultural equilibrium."

Williams' favorite genre of dance is Modern Dance, due to the freeness of form and that it is the most expressionistic. "Modern Dance allows the choreographer to become introspective and express his truest emotions," he explained.

Longwood's reception of Williams and his programs has been extremely positive. This can especially be seen with the attendance and the participation of the audience at his various recitals and performances.

The "With Open Hearts" performance in Jarman displayed his positive influence over the campus and the community. "The Spirit moved the barriers between the audience and the performer," he explained. "All hearts were open to what happened. I sensed that we were all one, not black, not white. We were all one."

The African-American Arts Explosion has also been drawing many people to the various performances and workshops. Williams said that the explosion and the dancing was a means of teaching people more about black history and black culture.

He believes that the arts have the power to draw people. The arts transcend anything that is touchable and break all barriers.

Williams' goals include making dance a more important role on campus. "I want people to think of Longwood as the school that's got 'that' dance department." In addition, he would like to see dance transform from just Physical Education classes to become offered as a major or minor.

Student Advisory Committee is asset to department

By Susan Mazza
Rotund Staff

The School of Business and Economics, under the direction of Dean Berkwood M. Farmer, has created a student-run cabinet called the Student Advisory Committee to the Dean. The purpose of this committe is to have a cross representation of students in the business and economics school to advise Farmer.

Farmer has been the dean of this school for only two years and immediately saw the need for a student panel. Farmer knows the importance of getting to know the students and likewise because as he says "students are our customers." Ken DeWitt is the student head of this Student Advisory Committee that consists of ten students of diverse concentrations, race, age, year in school, and gender. They serve as the eyes and ears of the school and advise Farmer of the strengths and weaknesses in all areas of the business school.

Another facet of the group's goals is service. Last year they coordinated and organized Operation Blue Jeans with the University of Kansas in order to send jeans to 3rd world countries.

They are also responsible for the Senior Night, and at Christmas time they helped raised money and made Christmas baskets for needy families in the Farmville area.

These members were the only group which represented Longwood College at the March of Dimes Walk-America on April 18th, which was coordinated by Virginia Power and TKE. Approximately $700 was raised.

30% undergraduate women sexually harassed

Sexual Harassment Policy reviewed

By Susan Mazza
Rotunda Staff

According to a 1984 survey conducted by B.W. Dziech and L. Weiner, thirty percent of undergraduate women are sexually harassed by at least one of their professors in their four years at college.

Of these women, only five percent of victims report the harassment or file a grievance.

One reason why there aren't more reports made is that the women sometimes do not have a clear understanding of sexual harassment and don't realize that is what has happened to them. Another is that they fear retaliation on the part of the professor and the college.

Two years ago, a Longwood policy review committee was formed as a branch of the Gender and Minority Issues Steering Committee for just such reasons. Their main concern was to revise the sexual harassment policy in order for students and faculty alike to have a clearer understanding of the sexual harassment definition, policies, and procedures of the college.

Much revising has taken place in this two year time span. The sexual harassment policy has been adapted to the more modernized needs of the school. This reconstructed policy has a strong statement against sexual harassment and a broader definition of the phrase.

There is a statement regarding student confidentiality and a non- retaliation clause included. Disciplinary action is outlined in the new policy for use against those who choose to disregard the non-retaliation clause.

Clearly stated in the policy will be an explanation regarding the working procedures an individual can follow in order to report sexual harassment.

One of the main goals for all of the people involved in this reconstruction is for the policies, definition, and procedures to be concise and easily understood by students, faculty, and staff.

This policy is being reviewed by SGA, the Staff Advisory Committee, the Equal Employment Committee, and the Full College Council before it is recommended formally to the Board of Visitors. It is expected that this policy will be approved and becomes part of Longwood's policies and procedures.

Keith D. Roots, Assistant to the President, hopes that this document will clear up any lingering questions individuals may have surrounding sexual harassment.

He feels that sexual harassment is an important issue that must be addressed because of the increasing number of public cases in the media and at other colleges.

One component not addressed in this draft of the policy is a clause on education. Roots foresees a brochure and training program to educate all members of the school about this topic in the near future.

Inspired by the Anita Hill-Clarence Thomas hearings in October 1991, the administration of many other colleges have redefined and reconstructed their sexual harassment policies.

Columbia University recently released a statement urging extreme caution in regards to romantic relationships between faculty and students. University of Virginia is considering going one step further by putting a ban on liaisons between students and faculty. University of Wisconsin at Madison have developed an educational manual and organize approximately 200 contact persons scattered throughout the campus that are trained to receive sexual harassment complaints.

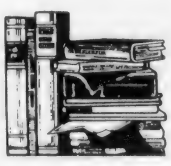
Some students have difficulty in discerning whether or not sexual harassment is actually taking place. Some individuals can interpret sexual advances as flattery.

Vita Rabinowitz, author of the essay "Coping with Sexual Harassment," states that "it can be an exhilarating experience for a young woman to be the object of attention from someone who holds the prestigious position of professor, someone who might choose any one of a hundred students to favor, but has chosen her. It is easy for her to fall into the trap of blaming herself for her normal desire to be noticed and appreciated."

Often times male professors do not see their actions as inappropriate- they believe that they are only flattering the students.

"Professors wield a great deal of power over students who depend on them for grades, letters of recommendation, academic and career counseling, and research and clinical opportunities," Rabinowitz wrote.

The National Advisory Council on Women's Educational Programs has developed its own definition of sexual harassment in educational situations. "Academic sexual harassment is the use of authority to emphasize the sexuality or sexual identity of the student in a manner which prevents or impairs that student's full enjoyment of educational benefits, climate, or opportunities."



Keith Roots, along with many other members of Longwood faculty, has realized the increased need for education about sexual harassment for students and staff.

Cathy Stec, a recent Longwood graduate feels that "students are getting brave in speaking about this topic as of late and hopefully, with the new policy, more individuals will take a stand for their rights and against sexual harassment."

Want ads enhance job chances

PRINCETON JUNCTION, N.J. (AP) – The odds of getting a job through want ads are better than you might think, says Phyllis Macklin, a career specialist. Knowing how to read and respond to them will increase your chances.

Macklin, partner in Minsuk, Macklin, Stein & Associates, a career counseling and outplacement firm, agrees with industry estimates that only 10 to 15 percent of all professional positions are found through recruitment advertising. But she points to a 28 percent success rate among her clients – owing, she says, to tips she gives them:

– Learn who's behind the blind listing under a post office box number by calling the post office, which is by law required to reveal that information.

– After finding out who the advertiser is, tenaciously network into the firm. Establish contact with the hiring authority for the job and aim for an appointment to which you'll bring your resume – instead of sending it beforehand.

– Read ads creatively. If a company often advertises for sales personnel, that means it probably needs credit-collections people. If a "V.P.-Marketing" spot is advertised, there probably will be a national sales manager opening, too.

– Reply by phone, even if the ad says, "Absolutely no phone calls will be accepted." Avoid mail replies when possible.

– Even if asked, don't specify salary requirements. Say only that compensation will depend on responsibilities and growth opportunities.

– Never send a resume to the personnel department, even when the ad requests it. Find out who is hiring, and contact that person directly.

– Answer ads late – a week or 10 days after the ad appears – to avoid "resume rush."

– Answer old ads. The firm may not have found the right candidate, or it may need to fill another similar position.

– Answer twice, sending more information.

– Always follow up by telephone. Your persistence may get you the interview.

Macklin says the best way to find a job is by networking, but other sources – ads, recruiters, direct mailing – should be explored creatively and stragegically.

"Don't be reactive, waiting for a position to appear magically. Make it happen," she says.

Fields of choice need recruits

The law of supply and demand rules the job market, so you might consider one these fields which need recruits:

– Computer Systems. "Students may be scared away by headlines about the slump in the computer industry, but they should be reading the want ads," says Dr. Alton Sanders, head of the systems analysis department at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio.

Enrollments are down – he cites 61 entering freshmen last year contrasting with 300 a decade ago – yet the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics projects a 79 percent increase in the need for systems analysts and computer scientists by 2005. The demand stems from growing use of computers as problem solvers by business and industry.

In a university survey, Sanders found that 62 of 65 responding 1992 majors had landed jobs within six months of graduation. Starting salaries averaged $30,031.

– Actuarial Science. Numberless numbers are out there in the computerized world, and there have to be people who can make sense of them. People with good analytical, statistical and mathematical skills will find opportunities as actuaries in all types of business fields, notably insurance, according to Carl Cowen, director of the actuarial science program at Purdue University in West Lafayette, Ind.

"Actuaries must be able to work with facts, figures and people to solve a variety of problems," he says. "These types of skills are also sought by employers looking to fill positions in areas such as quality control, market research or census management."

Actuaries' quantitative and analytical skills make them prime candidates for management, he adds. Purdue's progam includes courses such as interest theory but also stresses backgrounding in communication, English, business and liberal arts.

– The Music Business. There's more to music than performance, says Frederick Miller, dean of the School of Music at DePaul University in Chicago. "It extends into such areas as publishing, merchandising, arts management, record marketing, promotion and sales."

DePaul's new music-business degree program steers business-oriented musicians to careers that will let them enjoy the best two worlds. "These students can go a variety of ways after graduation. They have an opportunity to stay close to music but work in a business setting," says Miller.

– Court Reporting. An old profession with a new look, court reporting is growing along with the amount of litigation in the country. These days, court reporters can create instant transcripts with computer-aided transcription (CAT), which turns stenography notes quickly into English.

"Opportunities are plentiful, and technology is aiding our ability to deliver these extremely important services to the legal community and the judicial process," says Mary Hauptman, president of Court Reporting Institute of Hicksville, N.Y.

Certified and registered court reporters also are in demand for rapid data entry and closed captioning, she says.

Job search timing essential

When is the best time to start a job search?

"Start drilling what it takes to get a job into their heads when students start college, not during their senior year," advises William Smith, career development center director at Wartburg College in Waverly, Iowa.

Smith says that all too often graduates don't realize how difficult and competitive the job market is. "There are jobs available. Career development offices, however, need to make their students more marketable."

At Wartburg, incoming freshmen meet with counselors to get job-finding advice.

Students might be urged to get undergraduate experience in co-op or internship programs, so that when they go into the job market full time they have some kind of work record.

"Internships and co-ops are an important link between the academic world and the real world," says John Wallace, dean of cooperative education at Antioch College in Yellow Springs, Ohio. Antioch students must complete 18 months of co-op work, and at least three months in a different cultural environment, to graduate.

"Somebody with a European background might spend three months working in Harlem or South Central Los Angeles," says Wallace. Students typically work in hospitals, homeless shelters, newspapers and government agencies.

Frank Kollar, career development and placement director at Mansfield University in Pennsylvania says that this work helps students sort out their goals. "Internships and co-ops are important because students learn what jobs they don't want as well as what fields interest them."

Co-op work is part of the many degree programs offered at the Rochester Institute of Technology in New York. RIT says it places 2,600 students annually and attracts 1,400 employers around the country. Students also are finding jobs abroad.

Manny Contomanolis, director of cooperative education and placement, says he recently placed the first RIT student in Japan. "The numbers of students we have assisted over the years astounds me," he says, citing the longevity of the program, now over 80 years old.

"Women students usually have a tougher time in the job market and need extra help, says Dr. Mary Cianni, who created a mentorship program at Susquehanna University's Sigmund Weis School of Business in Selinsgrove, Pa. Each female business freshman is assigned a successful alumna as mentor. "Women have a harder time than males students finding good jobs, but women can learn the ins and outs of corporate life long before they graduate by taking part in our mentorship program."

Job leads and course recommendations from alumni are invaluable, as is networking entree, observes Toni McLawhorn, career planning and placement director at Roanoke College in Salem, Va. Her college organized an alumni-parent network along the East Coast to help find opportunities for students.

"If you know somebody, you're going to get a foot in the door a lot easier than somebody trying it cold turkey," McLawhorn says.

Still, the only person with ultimate responsibility in the job search is the student. The career centers can help best by teaching the students how to do it themselves.

"Developing a clear, manageable and realistic plan on how to find a job is often missing from a student's approach to the job market," says Dale Austin, career planning and placement director at Hope College in Holland, Mich.

His advice: Start early, when you're a freshman or sophomore.

"Any candidate looking for a career opportunity can't wait until graduation to worry about internships or resumes. Forget it. If you wait until you're a senior to start preparing to find a job, then you missed the boat."

Career Center Update

Longwood graduates flourishing

Although the job market continues to be difficult, placement statistics for the 1992 class are very positive and higher than 1991. This information is very encouraging for the class of 1993. These statistics are based on information collected from less than half of the 1992 graduating class.

Of the 635 graduates in 1992, placement information was collected from 273 (43%) of them indicating that 95% are either working, attending graduate school, or serving in the military. This is an increase of 4% from last year's report. Professional majors had a 94% placement and Liberal Arts and Sciences majors had a 96% placement.

Other observations from the report, which is available in the Career Center, are as follows:

38 (14%) graduates are enrolled in 20 different graduate schools.

Of the 91 education majors responding, 92% are placed either in teaching, in graduate school or employed out of teaching.

Of the 200 graduates responding to the salary question, 90 (45%) are earning over $21,000.00 and 46 (23%) are earning more than $24,000.00.

Most graduates are residing in Virginia and names of employers hiring our graduates include:

Lacrosse goes undefeated

Longwood's undefeated lacrosse team improved to 11-0 after a double-overtime, sudden-death 14-13 win at Bridgewater Saturday. In doing so, the Lady Lancers established a new record for wins in a season, eclipsing the 1981 record of 10. Also surpassed was the record for most goals scored (135, set in 1992). Longwood now has 144 goals with one game remaining.

"It was a well-played, intense game by both teams," said an exuberant coach Sandy Bridgeman after the hard-fought win. "It was very exciting game, with a lot of emotion and determination shown by us."

The Lady Lancers held a slight 7-5 edge over the home team at the halftime intermission. At the end of regulation play, both teams were deadlocked at 11 goals each. Two three-minute periods followed, with the teams switching ends at the split. After another tie, it was determined that a three-minute sudden-death period would follow. Longwood played tough by not allowing a shot in this period, while taking two of their own. It was on the second shot that the Lady Lancers claimed victory.

Freshman Natalie Buritsch led all scorers with seven goals, including the game winner on a free position taken after a foul on Bridgewater. With the seven goals, Buritsch added her name to the record book for most goals in a game in one season. Buritsch surpassed former standout Lara Cini ('92-six goals) and is now third on the list behind lacrosse great Sue Groff ('86-14 and nine goals).

Senior co-captain Denise Hanley contibuted four goals of her own, with classmate Tonia Harris adding one goal and an assist. Junior Anita Warford had two goals, while fellow attack wing Nora Lamb also had an assist.

"Once again, we played well in pressuring the midfield and creating turnovers," continued Bridgeman. "Bridgewater is a quality opponent and we have to feel good in overcoming the challenge they presented to us."

Defensively, the Lancers stood tall in only allowing BC's leading scorer six goals.

"I am especially pleased in the defense we played today," commented Bridgeman. " Susie Lindsay was assigned to cover their (BC) top scorer and she did a nice job in helping to stop the ball."

Junior Kim Chapman recorded 13 saves in goal for the Lady Lancers. Chapman now has 55 denials for a save percentage of .530 percent.

As the win column grows, so does the stat sheet. Buritsch is the leading point maker on the squad with 40 goals and six assists for 46 points. Warford has 30 goals and two assists for 32 points, while fellow attack player Denise Hanley has scored 22 goals for 22 points. Defensively, Hanley leads the ground ball and draw control departments with 63 and 22, respectively. Lindsay is not far off the pace with 59 ground balls and tied for second in draw controls (15) with Lamb.

On Tuesday the Longwood Lacrosse team took their 11-0 record into their last game against Lynchburg College. It was a see saw battle the whole gamen and the score was tied at 10-10 with under a minute to go. Longwood controlled the ball. With the clock winding down, Tonia Harris scored the game winning goal.

The Lady Lancers had a perfect season, the only on in the history of Longwood Lacrosse. They bettered their record from the previous year (9-2), which, up until then, had been their best season in history. The 12-0 mark will be hard to top in the future, but the Lady Lancers are sure to be up to the challange next year.

Todd Bowman

Natalie Buritsch

Bowman and Buritsch named players of the week

Longwood baseball player Todd Bowman and lacrosse player Natalie Buritsch, who turned in outstanding performances last week in their respective sports, have been named co-Longwood College Players of the Week for the period April 11-18. Player of the week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

Bowman blasted four homers in three games and drove in nine runs as the Lancers beat Christopher-Newport 18-3, but lost at Wofford. At CNU, Bowman went 4-6 with a pair of homers and drove in five runs. Sunday against Wofford, the senior first baseman had a two-run homer in each contest.

Now the Lancer home run leader with eight this season, Bowman is hitting .358 with five doubles, two triples and 26 RBI. A graduate of Halifax County High School, Bowman has ripped 23 homers in his 3-year career at Longwood and ranks sixth on the team's all-time home run list. He now calls Radford, Va. home. He's majoring in political science.

Freshman Leads Lacrosse Team In Scoring

Buritsch scored seven goals, including the game-winner in overtime, as Longwood edged Bridge- water 14-13 in sudden-death Saturday to maintain an 11-0 season. The rookie is now third on the Longwood list for goals in a game behind Sue Groff who scored 14 in one game and nine in another in 1986.

Longwood's scoring leader with 40 goals and six assists, Buritsch had six goals in a 15-3 romp over Mary Baldwin April 7 and five in last Tuesday's 19-18 win at Randolph-Macon. A graduate of Chesapeake High School in Pasadena, Md., Buritsch is majoring in psychology and special education.

Baseball drops three in a row

Longwood's baseball team lost weeks of momentum in the space of two days Sunday and Monday as the Lancers dropped three games in a row, after winning 11 straight.

Following double defeats at Wofford Sunday, the Lancers dropped a 20-2 decision to CIAA champ Norfolk State Monday afternoon at home. It was LC's worst defeat since a 19-0 shellacking at the University of Richmond in 1985.

The Lancers, with the season winding down, traveled to North Carolina A&T Tuesday for two games. Wednesday, Virginia State is scheduled to visit for a 1:00 doubleheader. Saturday, Longwood travels north to Baltimore for a twinbill with Coppin State. Sunday at 2:00 Wofford will play a single game in Farmville. All Longwood games are open to the public at no charge.

Norfolk State moved its record to 23-7 and won for the 12th time in a row Monday at Lancer Stadium. The Spartans jumped ahead 7-0 after two innings and were up 13-0 by the end of four. Outfielders Brian Edlow and Alex Oates combined for three homes and nine RBI as the Spartans collected 21 hits against four Lancer pitchers. Edlow had a pair of two–run homers and five RBI total. Lancer starter Wyatt Flippen absorbed the defeat. He's now 3-4.

Shawn Jones had two hits for the Lancers, including a triple. The Norfolk State victory avenged a 5-3 Longwood win in Norfolk back in March.

Wofford put an end to Longwood's 11-game win streak Sunday in a twinbill in Spartanburg, S.C. as Justin Laughlin hit three homers to pace the Terriers' 9-4 and 7-6 sweep. Taking advantage of its cozy home field, Wofford had five homers for the day as did the Lancers.

Laughlin hit two homers and drove in four runs in the opener and came back with a two-run shot in the second game. Jason Gross took the first game loss and senior Kyle Weaver lost for just the second time this season in the nightcap. Todd Bowman had a homer in each game for Longwood and Matt Martinez hit two homers in the second contest for the Lancers. Mike Madden hit a pinch-hit homer in the fifth when the Lancers rallied for five runs. Bowman now has eight homers for the season to lead Longwood.

Winning its 11th game in a row, Longwood had defeated homestanding Christopher-Newport 18-3 last Wednesday as Bowman and Shawn Jones ripped a pair of home runs each. Longwood got a career day from Bowman. The first baseman went 4-6 with a double, two homers and five RBI. Weaver, with relief help from Flippen, picked up the victory Wednesday.

Longwood's leading hitters are: Chris Tyson (.377, 7 doubles, 15 RBI), Shawn Jones (.375, 26 RBI, 7 homers), Todd Bowman (.358, 5 doubles, 8 homers, 26 RBI), Jeff Toms (.345, 28 runs,13 RBI, 10-10 stolen bases), Brian Bassett (.333, 19 RBI, 3 doubles, 3 triples), Terry Taylor (.316, 31 RBI, 6 doubles, 18-18 stolen bases), and Chris Hatcher (.308, 3 doubles).

Leading the Lancer pitchers are Kyle Weaver (82, 59 strikeouts, 2.13 e.r.a., and seven complete games), freshman Jason Gross (3-1, 4.78), and freshman Greg Goodlin, (2-0, 3.70).

Lancers end season at tournament

The Longwood College men's golf team completed it's season this past weekend at the NCAA District II Division II Tournament at Pipe Stem State Park in Princeton, W.Va.

The Lancers finished sixth of six teams at the tournament, shooting a two-round 325-320-645. South Carolina-Aiken placed first with a 596 total (305-291), and Tom Ritenour of Slippery Rock was the tournament's medalist, shooting a 70-71-141, three strokes under par.

Senior co-captains Steve Crute and Frank Davide led the Lancers at the championships, Crute shooting a 81-76-157 and Davide posting a 77-83 - 160. Junior Shawn Moore and freshman Eric Levin both shot 166 for the two days, Moore with an 80-86 and Levin with 89-77. Freshman Jon Vaughn rounded out the five-man team, shooting an 87-84-171.

"I am very pleased with our season," said coach Steve Nelson. "We played competitively all year, which is something each and every guy on this team can be proud of."

"Steve Crute had an outstanding year, and we will definitely miss him and Davide next season. Eric Levin had a great year and Jon Vaughn will be a good one for us, so we really have a lot to look forward to next season."

Women's tennis 6-1

Longwood's women's tennis team headed into its final match of the spring at Randolph-Macon Tuesday with a 6-1 record. The Lady Lancers suffered their first loss of the spring Sunday at Roanoke when the Maroons took a 7-2 triumph. Longwood bounced back to clip visiting Hollins 9-0 Monday in Farmville.

A match with Lynchburg scheduled for last Thursday was not played because of a scheduling conflict. Coupled with a 7-1 record in the fall, Longwood's 6-1 spring mark gives it a 13-2 ledger for the year.

Gaining singles wins for Longwood Monday were No. 1 Jenny Holm, No. 2 Melanie Saunders, No. 3 Kelley Regan, No. 4 Jennifer Whitlow, No. 5 Amy Thomas and No. 6 Kris Stevens.

Starting with Holm, now 6-1, and going down the line, all the Lady Lancers have winning singles marks this spring. Saunders, Regan, and Whitlow are also 6-1 while Thomas and Stevens are 5-2.

In doubles, Longwood has lost only two matches this season. Holm and Regan are 6-1, Whitlow and Jenny Divina are 3-0, and Whitlow and Saunders 4-0.

ATHLETES OF THE YEAR

Bryan Weaver, Senior
Male Athlete of the Year

High School: Denbigh
Hometown: Newport News, Va.
Sport: Basketball
Position: Center
Major: History

Leader. There is no other word to describe Bryan Weaver. Maybe scrapper or hustler, but the word leader does him justice. Unlike most players, he doesn't judge his personal success on how many points he scores, rather on two different categories: Did the team win, and how many rebounds did he pull down. He was definitely successful this year under those terms. He led the team to their best record in five years with a mark of 17-10. He put himself in the record books by becoming the fourth all time leading career rebounder with 595 career rebounds. He averaged 7.5 rebounds a game which was the team's best. He was named National Division II Player of the Week last year when he scored 58 points and had 20 rebounds in two games. His performance this year earned him an Honorable Mention to the NCAA Division II All-American Team. Weaver is 11th all time in points scored with 918. The reason why Bryan has been selected for The Rotunda Male Athlete of the Year is because he does everything the stat sheets can't show. He's the team leader on and off the court, he hustles, he dives for loose balls, he gives 110% in every game, and his attitude is that of a winner. No player is more deserving of this award.

Ana Litton, Junior
Female Athlete of the Year

High School: James Wood
Hometown: Winchester, Va
Sport: Basketball and Softball
Position: Guard/Forward and Centerfield, respectively
Major: Sociology/Criminal Justice

Nobody even comes close to the outstanding athletic performance that this athlete has put forth. Ana Litton personifies sportsmanship, leadership, and athleticism. She has been a solid player in two sports for Longwood college and she has set records in both. For the basketball team, she scored 595 points on the season which is one point from tying the Longwood record. Litton averaged 22 points per game which ranked second in Longwood history. She made 242 field goals which is a Longwood record. Ana's career scoring average is 14 points per game which ranks fifth in the history for the Lady Lancers basketball team. She had 46 three-point field goals this season which ranks third all-time and her 83 steals ranks fourth. Litton has already scored 1067 points in her three year career at Longwood and that makes her the eighth highest scorer in the record books. She is only 503 points from becoming the all-time leading scorer. Ana was named the Freshman Athlete of the Year two years ago and gained an Honorable Mention All-State VaSID last year. Her outstanding season awarded her the honor of being an NCAA Division II All-American Finalist. That's not all. She is a very impressive softball player as well. Litton plays centerfield for the Lady Lancer softball team. This season she batted .309 (fourth on the team), and had 18 RBI (first on the team), 4 doubles, 4 triples, and 1 home run. Ana has a career .328 batting average. She received team MVP honors her freshman year in which she set the school record for doubles with 8. In high school, Ana was named The Winchester Star Player of the Year and she gained All-District, Area, and Region honors.

We are glad to name Ana Litton The Rotunda Female Athlete of the Year.

Cassie Ensley, Junior
Student Athlete of the Year

High School: Albert Einstein
Hometown: Olney, Md.
Sport: Basketball
Position: Guard
GPA: 3.96
Major: Modern Language

Four games into the season, Cassie Ensley sustained a season-ending knee injury. In the four games she played she scored 70 points, averaging 17.5 points per game. Ensley has 753 career points. When she was unsure of the magnitude of her injury, Cassie continued to practice with the team. After she discovered that the injury was season-ending, Ensley took on the role of being a student-coach. She never missed a trip and continued to support her team. After being named co-MVP last season, Cassie was hoping to have another good year. A stroke of bad luck cut her season short. Throughout all of this hardship, Cassie maintained to do well in the classroom. Her 3.96 grade point average ranks the highest of all athletes, a mark worthy of being mentioned and awarded. The NCAA granted Cassie an extra year of eligibility. She will certainly be welcomed back to the team next year. We are proud to name Cassie Ensley The Rotunda Student-Athlete of the Year.

Mark Helberg, Sophomore

High School: Osbourn Park
Hometown: Dumfries, Va.
Sport: Wrestling
Weight Class: 190/177 lbs.
Major: Mathematics

Helberg, the youngest of The Rotunda Athletes of the Year, has a very bright future. After sustaining a fractured elbow last year and missing the Virginia State Championships and the Division II Southeast Regional, Mark returned this year with vengeance. His 24-11 record this season was the best of any other Lancer wrestler. He took second place at the VMI Keydet Invitational and at the Washington and Lee Invitational . He wrestled in the 190 pound weight class in both meets. Mark swiped first place in the 177 pound class at both the Virginia State Collegiate Tournament and the Division II Southeast Regional tournament. These wins qualified him for the NCAA Division II Nationals. Despite two losses at the Nationals, Mark is looking forward to return to the mats at Nationals for the next two years.

Jason Casano, Senior

High School: North Babylon
Hometown: North Babylon, NJ
Sport: Soccer
Position: Back
Major: Finance

On a team where five or six freshman start, there has to be senior leadership. Casano, an experienced veteran, led the young Lancer Soccer Team to 10-8-1 overall record and helped them go undefeated (5-0) in the VISA Eastern Division. Casano, who was an All-VISA Eastern Division selection last two years, was one of the tri-captains of this team. He scored 3 goals in 17 attempts, and had 1 assist to give him 7 points on the season. He started all 16 games in which he played. Jason was the MVP Defender in the South Side Soccer Classic last year. He is one of the teams best defenders. Coach Stan Cieplinski is going to miss Jason Casano's leadership next year.

Stephen Crute, Senior

High School: Bluestone
Hometown: Clarksville, Va.
Sport: Golf
Stroke Average (season): 77.6
Major: Physical Education

Consistency. If you looked up this word in the dictionary you would see a picture Steve Crute swinging a golf club. His fall stroke average was 77.5, and in the spring it was 77.6. Crute's stroke average this year was the third best in Lancer history. In 21 rounds this season Crute slipped over 80 only seven times. Among his other credentials for Athlete of the Year honors are being chosen First Team All-State College Division in 1992 and winning the State Championship in 1991. Being one of the most dedicated golfers, Steve is definitely a candidate for team MVP and Division II NCAA All- American.

David Chiles, Sophomore

High School: Robinson
Hometown: Burke, Va
Sport: Tennis
Seating: #1/#2
Major: Psychology

Despite a dismal season for the Men's Lancer Tennis team, this student showed promise. Dave Chiles split playing the number one and two positions for this years team. This is Chiles first year playing for Coach Stan Cieplinski. He had a 3-4 record in singles and 3-3 for doubles. In high school he was a First Team All-District selection and MVP of the Robinson High School Tennis Team in 1989-1990. Only a sophomore, Chiles still has many years to contribute the tennis team here at Longwood.

Charles "Soup" Brown, Junior

High School: Burton
Hometown: Williamsburg, Va.
Sport: Basketball
Position: Guard/Forward
Major: Social Work

It's one thing for a player to play with confidence, aggressiveness, and intensity. It is another when he bestows these attributes in young players. "Soup" is an intense competitor who will do anything to win, and yet he is a team player whose work ethic is impeccable. Last year's team MVP, Brown returned this year to lead the team in points per game (13.3) just as he did a year ago (13.4 ppg). After only playing for two years, Brown is only 266 points from reaching the 1000 point mark. If he reaches this milestone he could be only the tenth player in Longwood's history to score 1000 points. Soup's other stats include 4.5 rebounds per game, 3 assists per game, and he led the team in steals with 38. Next year, the team will be losing senior captain Brian Weaver, and senior Chuck Laster. Coach Ron Carr will be looking for someone to lead this team. Look no further coach, Soup is your man.

Kyle Weaver, Senior

High School: Halifax
Hometown: Halifax, Va.
Sport: Baseball
Position: Pitcher
Major: Finance

Kyle has got his name all over the record books. The baseball season has yet to end, but as of now Kyle is tied for third in career wins (26), fourth in career earned run average (3.41), fourth in career strike outs (146), fourth in career innings pitched (217), and fifth in walks per seven innings (1.9). Some of Weaver's single season marks set this year will place him in record books as well. His earned run average (2.13) is the third best in Lancer history, along with his 56 strike outs (6th best), 8 wins (4th best), 67 innings pitched (6th best), and 1.25 walks per seven innings (3rd best). He has a 26-7 career record as a Lancer pitcher. This season Kyle is Coach Buddy Bolding's "go to" guy. Weaver is 8-2 with 2 saves. He has been used in a variety of roles. In the twenty-seven games played Weaver has appeared in thirteen and only started eight times. He has kept this years Lancer baseball team in contention for a regional tournament bid. Kyle's play has definitely made him a candidate for team MVP and an NCAA Division II All-American selection. He was an Honorable Mention for The Rotunda Male Athlete of the Year.

Anita Warford, Junior

High School: North Stafford
Hometown: Stafford, Va.
Sport: Lacrosse
Position: Attack Wing
Major: Math and Psychology

On a team that was undefeated, Anita Warford was an important player. She has started every game in the last two years. This season she scored 30 goals and had 2 assists, which adds up to 32 points. Warford controlled 99 ground balls in the past two years. Coming off their 9-2 season in 1992 (which was the Lacrosse teams best record through 1992), Warford led the Lady Lancer's to a perfect season of 12-0. Anita also played field hockey for Longwood. At North Stafford High School she led their field hockey team to consecutive District, Region, and State titles. Anita was a Back for the Lady Lancer field hockey team. She had two assists on the year and she started every game. Her leadership of the field hockey and lacrosse team was very essential to their future.

Charity Owens, Freshman

High School: Loudoun Valley
Hometown: Hamilton, Va.
Sport: Basketball
Position: Forward
Major: Psychology and Special Education

This freshman started in all twenty-seven games. Charity Owens showed poise and confidence in her first season at the collegiate level. Her 262 rebounds this season is third best in the history of the Lady Lancers. She averaged 9.7 rebounds per game which ranked 5th all time for rebound average in a season. Owens averaged 6.6 points per game with 178 total points on the season. With increased offensive performance, Owens could be the first Lady Lancer to have 1000 points and 1000 rebounds for her career. In high school, Charity was a two time All-District selection in basketball. She was a District Champ in the 400 meter for her high school track team for three consecutive years. Her athletic ability allows her to play on a higher level than most people expect. She should be a key asset for the team in the future.

Missy Moran, Junior

High School: First Colonial
Hometown: Virginia Beach, Va.
Sport: Field Hockey
Position: Midfield
Major: Biology/Pre Med.

Missy Moran led the field hockey team to it's best record in five years. She has 39 career starts in which she has scored 11 career goals. This year she led the team in goals (8), assists (9), and total points (25). She was named field hockey MVP in 1990. Moran was named to the 2nd Team NCAA Division II All-American Team. At First Colonial High School, Missy was named to the All-Beach and All-Region teams. Field hockey Coach Sandy Bridgeman will be happy to see Moran return for another season and perhaps lead a young team to there best season ever.

Jenny Holm, Senior

High School: Menchville
Hometown: Newport News, Va
Sport: Tennis
Seating: #1
Major: Physical Education

The Lady Lancer Tennis team had a very successful season with a 6 1 record. Jenny Holm is a big reason for this success. Holm played #1 in singles since her freshman year. She played #1 doubles with Kelly Regan this season. Jenny has been named co-MVP twice. She had a singles record this season of 8 2 which brings her career record to 43 24. Her doubles record was 9 1 this season. In high school she earned Peninsula District Player of the Year honors. Her performance this season may give her an NCAA Division II All American nomination.

All choices were made by the Rotunda editorial staff. All statistical data was updated as of 4/16/93. Sports Info.

Mari Willen, Sophomore

High School: Chopticon
Hometown: Mechanicsville, Md.
Sport: Softball and Field Hockey
Position: Left Field and Midfield, respectively
Major: Biology

Mari Willen was an offensive machine. She hit .380 last year while leading the team in triples with five. This year Willen hit .375 with 2 home runs and 16 RBI. She struck out only 4 times in 96 at bats. That is the lowest ratio on the team. Mari was named Player of the Week by the Longwood College Sports Information Office for the week of March 7-14. Mari also played field hockey here at Longwood this season, where she started all fifteen games in which she played. Willen scored 8 goals on just 58 shots with a goal averaged of 5 which was the team best. She had a total of 17 points on the season. In high school Mari gained All Conference honors in field hockey as well as softball. She is usually a key player on both teams. She was an honorable mention pick for The Rotunda Conference Field Hockey Team.

Charlaine Coetzee, Sophomore

High School: Fairmont
Hometown: Cape Town, S. Africa
Sport: Golf
Stroke Average: 80.9
Major: History

One of the many overseas golf team members, Charlaine brings her excellent golf game along way to become a unique selection for an NCAA All-American player. In high school she excelled in several other sports such as field hockey (team captain), tennis, and softball. She was named Sports Woman of the Year for the 1989-90 school year. Last year Charlaine earned NCAA All-American honors. Her career stroke average is 81.4. She is only a sophomore so she will continue to provide much leadership for the team for years to come.
